WAR CLOUDS GATHER AS SINO-JAPANESE TENSION INCREASES

VICTORIA XI OUT FOR 215 TO ENGLAND

Larwood 4 For 29 At Bendigo.

JARDINE, ONLY 11.

Bendigo, Yesterday.

In a two-day fixture against a Victoria Country XI to-day the M.C.C. touring eleven dismissed the home side for 215 and scored 30 for the loss of one wicket before the close of play.

The Victorians, who batted thirteen and fielded eleven, were spared long spells from Larwood, the Nottingham bowler being taken off by Jardine after he had taken 4 wickets for 29 runs.

D. R. Jardine, the visiting skipper, scored 11 runs out of the M.C.C. total of 30 for 1.

This match is only a holiday fixture to enable the tourists to loosen up in preparation for the third Test at Adelaide on Friday the Thirteenth!

SIMPLE BURIAL FOR MR. COOLIDGE.

His Voice On Radio
After Death.

Northampton, Yesterday.

For the first time in history the voice of an Ex-President has been posthumously broadcast. The vocal station, yesterday broadcast a record of Mr. Calvin Coolidge's speech of welcome to Colonel Lindbergh, when he returned to America in June 1927, after flying the Atlantic ocean. Mr. Coolidge's body lay in state until yesterday morning to permit friends to pay their final respects before the simple funeral service was attended, in addition to President Hoover, by all members of the Cabinet and most of the Senators and other Congress members.—Reuter.

China's Sympathy.

Nanking, Yesterday.
On behalf of the National Government of China, Mr. Lo Wen-kan, the Foreign Minister, wired condolences to Mrs. Calvin Coolidge and her family, on the death of her husband.—Reuter.

V.C.'S DEATH

Col. Borton Broke
His Neck In 1915.

WON AWARD IN 1919.

London, Yesterday.

The indomitable courage of Lieut-Colonel Arthur Drummond Borton, V. C., who died in a hospital in Suffolk at the age of 49 years, is shown by the fact that although his neck was broken in an air crash in 1915, and he was pronounced unfit for further service, within three months he was called for the Dardanelles in command of a section of motor machine guns.

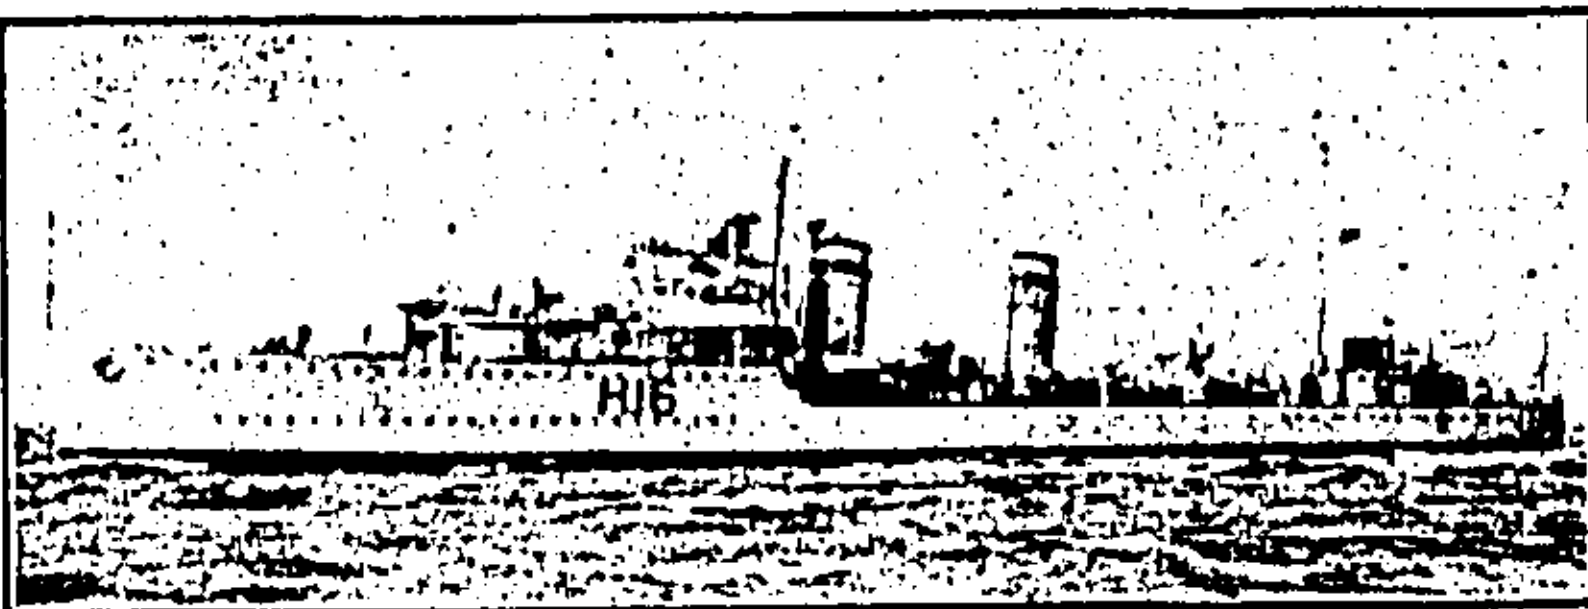

He won the Victoria Cross in Palestine in 1917.—Reuter.

MORE VICTIMS OF FIRE ON "ATLANTIQUE"

OFFICER'S FOOT CRUSHED BETWEEN LINER AND TUG.

3 SEAMEN FEARED LOST IN FLAMES OF BURNING HULK.

(Reuter's Special Service)

PARIS, YESTERDAY.

THE ILL-FATED FRENCH LUXURY LINER, ATLANTIQUE, HAS CLAIMED ANOTHER VICTIM, THUS ADDING FURTHER TO THE 21 WHO ARE FEARED DEAD AS THE RESULT OF THE FIRE WHICH REDUCED THE FINE VESSEL TO A SMOULDERING HULK.

The latest is Lieutenant Evian, one of the officers attached to the ship, who in an effort to attach another hawser between the tug and the liner, had his foot crushed between the two vessels, necessitating the amputation of his leg. He is reported to be in a serious condition.

The sea was very rough at the time, and when it became necessary for an additional hawser to be attached to the prow of the liner, Evian volunteered for the hazardous job, which meant climbing up a cable to the deck of the liner from the tug.

He donned a lifebelt, and waited until the tug was within 18 inches of the side of the liner before he swung on to the dangling rope. Before he could climb to the top of the rope, however, a heavy swell caught the tug and dashed the smaller craft against the side of the liner, crushing Evian's foot in the process.

Immediately after the accident, the tug returned at full speed for Cherbourg, where the injured man was rushed to hospital. His leg was amputated below the knee.

The tug, after re-coaling, steamed off again to the Atlantique, with more volunteers, under Captain Schoof, the captain of the liner.

The latter's efforts to board his wrecked liner have raised an interesting question regarding property rights in the case of shipwrecks. According to the Professor of Maritime Law at Paris University, two thirds of the value of the wreck salvaged in the open sea belong to the original owners, while the other third is shared between all rescuers and that the party which is first to board the wreck enjoys no privilege.

"CHINA PREPARED TO RESIST"

CHINESE TROOPS MOVE UP

Quiet Situation At Chinwangtao.

APPEAL TO LEAGUE

Peking, Yesterday.

Foreign reports from Chinwangtao state that the situation continues quiet, and the movement of Chinese troops westward is "likely" to embarrass the Japanese.

It is stated that seven battalions of Chinese troops have now moved into the area between Tangshan and Chinwangtao. The Japanese military authorities, arriving at Chinwangtao to-day, bringing the Japanese fleet there to five vessels.

Wounded soldiers continue to arrive. There are now 350 hospitalized in the Peking military hospital. Various public appeals are being raised for funds to aid for those still remaining in the front. They also demand that the Young Marshal to retreat, and send troops to assist him in doing so.

General Yen Hui-shan, and all the military leaders are stating that they are holding their troops ready for any emergency arising out of the Japanese aggression in North China.—Reuter.

China Appeals.

Geneva, Yesterday.

The Chinese delegation have appealed to the League of Nations to lose no time in taking effective measures to check Japanese action.

The communication draws attention to the surprise attack at the "last strategic point south of the Great Wall from where Japan is able to descend at any moment into Tientsin, Peking and Jehol."

In the meantime Chinese military continue to do their utmost to resist any further aggression. Peking, Yesterday.

Reports from all sides deny the Shanghai reports that hostilities broke out again at the Shanhai-kwan area last night. General Nakamura's Headquarters at Tientsin issued a communique at eight o'clock this morning declaring that quiet still reigns at the Tashihho front.

It is generally accepted, however, that the situation is extremely tense.—Reuter.

T. V. Soong Active In Mobilization Plans.

Nanking, Yesterday.

Mr. T. V. Soong, the Finance Minister who is acting as President of the Executive Yuan in the absence of Mr. Wang Ching-wei, is proceeding to Nanking to-night in connection with the Shanhai-kwan situation. It is learned that Soong is most active working with regard to the mobilization of troops and defense plans. He is returning to Nanking for the purpose of holding a conference with the Government leaders regarding North China. Mr. Soong will be back in Shanghai on January 12.—Reuter.

TROOP MOVEMENTS ON BOTH SIDES

OPINION FIRING IN ALL PARTS OF CHINA

CHANG HSUEH-LIANG DENOUNCED.

PEIFING, YESTERDAY.

WITH TROOP MOVEMENTS GOING ON BOTH SIDES, THE SINO-JAPANESE SITUATION IN NORTH CHINA HAS TAKEN A DEFINITE TURN FOR THE WORSE AND WAR IS BELIEVED TO BE IMMINENT. AS THE TENSION IS INCREASING HOURLY, FRESH HOSTILITIES ARE NOW CONSIDERED TO BE INEVITABLE.

War clouds appear again to be hovering over the area south of Shanhai-kwan, which a few days ago fell into the hands of the Japanese forces, the situation at Chinwangtao being particularly dangerous. Japanese warships stationed there appear to be ready for action, while the Chinese are determined to make a firm stand.

The Japanese military authorities, it would appear are taking exception to certain small troop movements on the part of the Chinese, and if it is the Japanese military policy to search for "provocation" as an excuse, then the whole of North China may soon be involved in military operations.

The talk of peace negotiations has completely died down. General Chang Hsueh-liang, having announced that so far no Japanese representatives have approached him in connection with negotiations for the pacific settlement of the Shanhai-kwan issue.

The position between the Lan River and Shanhai-kwan at present is that the Japanese troops are in superior numbers. Very reliable foreign estimates from Shanhai-kwan state that 6,000 Japanese troops have been amassed there, with more just outside the Great Wall. The Suzuki Brigade has also arrived there with a tremendous supply of food and ammunition.

Attacked Feared.

The number of Chinese troops which are between the Lan River and Tashihho appears to be considerably less and the fear that the Japanese may again attack appears to have led the Chinese to move up the rear guard between Tientsin and the Lan River.

Various sources state that five trains containing 3,000 men passed through Tientsin last night going in an easterly direction. Consequently, an extremely dangerous position now exists at Chinwangtao where the Chinese fear their inferior numbers may be attacked by the Japanese and it is understood that Nanking's orders to General Chang Hsueh-liang to "resist if attacked" still stand.

Under these circumstances the Chinese military authorities are bound to supply their rear guard to the Chinwangtao forces.

On the other hand the Japanese military are seeking further provocation from which further operations may follow. These circumstances are very serious and it is believed that the Japanese are now in a position to attack the Chinese at any moment.

SHANGHAI SITUATION

AN ARREST IN MYSTERY MURDER CASE

Young Pastry Cook
Charged in London.

DR. ZEMENIDES' DEATH.

London, Yesterday.

The murder of Doctor Zemenides has resulted in the arrest of a Cypriote, Theodoros Petrou, aged 20 years, described as a pastry cook. He has been charged in the Marylebone Police Court with the wilful murder of Zemenides and remanded in custody for one week.—Reuter.

Shot After Argument.
Doctor Angelos Zemenides was a wealthy Doctor of Science, and was living in a boarding house in the northern district of London. He met his death on January 2, shortly before midnight, when an unknown man, who called to see him, shot him after a heated argument in the hall of the house.

The doctor's assailant, was described by the maid as "a swarthy man, obviously a foreigner." It is suggested that the motive for the crime may have been political, since Dr. Zemenides was actively interested in politics in Cyprus, where, it is said, he made several bitter enemies.

SHERLOCK HOLMES STORY IN CHINA MAIL

A Masterpiece By Conan Doyle.

STARTS TO-MORROW

A great Sherlock Holmes story, the Adventure of Silver Blaze, by the late Sir A. Conan Doyle, will be published in the China Mail, the first instalment starting to-morrow.

Sherlock Holmes is more than a character in fiction—he is a national legend. This splendid example of the power of fiction of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's great creation stands excellent comparison with the methods of the modern short story.

Other features in the China Mail, the oldest established newspaper in the Far East, include the Colony's best Sports pages, a Women's page, a cross-word puzzle and a daily cartoon. Columns on Literature, Art and Drama, Building, Engineering and Aviation, Motoring, Cinema and Children's Topics also appear during each week.

TOPICS

From Our Own Correspondent

December 11.

Lord Danesfort.
Lord Danesfort, formerly Sir John Butcher, K.C., who has come to be regarded in the Upper House as a kind of faithful watchdog, in calling attention to all activities at home or abroad that seem likely to injure Imperial interests, was 70 recently.

It speaks volumes for his transparent honesty and integrity of purpose that, despite very different opinions in politics, he won the friendship and admiration of an extreme Radical like George Meredith.

Their friendship began through the late Lady Danesfort, the original of Cecilia Halkett in "Beauchamp's Career," whom Meredith regarded with almost paternal affection.

Though at first he grumbled mildly over her choice of "a Tory lord," the novelist soon acknowledged that she had chosen extremely well, and the two households became very intimate.

Course and Court.

That the Prince of Wales is not a "one-game man" was proved by his activity on course and court on the day before the Scottish visit.

He sandwiched afternoon engagements in London between a morning round of golf at Coombe Hill and a strenuous match of squash with Capt. Guy Westmacott at night, when the new Marlborough Club courts were opened. Then, his Royal Highness caught the midnight train to Edinburgh and undertook a heavy Armistice Day programme.

By the way, Capt. Westmacott is a very versatile games player, having successfully pursued or struck nearly every size of ball; and he is handing on his talent.

His son won a first prize at the Eastbourne lawn tennis tournament this year.

Arnold Bennett's Diaries.

A friend of the late Mr. Arnold Bennett, who has seen the original manuscript of his private diaries, said recently, that they are a complete self-revelation of the life of the novelist.

Every day on a separate page he recorded the weather, the number of words written, how much he had spent, and what he had done, including domestic episodes.

An Historical Error.

The demolition of Dutton Hall, Cheshire, which is to be re-erected as a new wing to Mr. John Dewar's home at East Grinstead, is a reminder of the last duel to take place in Hyde Park. For it was over the Dutton property that the Duke of Hamilton, after his creation as Baron Dutton, had a dispute with Lord Mohun—and a duel took place in which both were killed.

Dean Swift, who was then living in London, maintained that the Duke was only wounded and was stabbed by Lord Mohun's second, but this was never proved.

Thackeray introduces the duel into "Esmond," but represents the Duke as a widower and the accepted suitor of Beatrix Esmond.

Actually there was a perfectly good Duchess, who was fast asleep in their house in St. James's-square when the Duke was carried home dead.

The Church's Portrait Painter.

Mr. De Lasso seems to be in the way of becoming the accepted portrait painter to the Church of England. His large canvas of Archbishop Davidson already looks down on the Assembly.

On Nov. 29, too, a portrait by him of the present Archbishop was unveiled in the Church House, which already contains his portraits of Lord Selborne and Mr. F. A. White, vice-president of the Corporation of the Church House.

A Trio of Poets.

Congratulations to Mr. Wilfrid Meynell on his 80th birthday. Himself a poet, essayist, and biographer of Disraeli, he was the husband of a still greater poet, the late Alice Meynell, and the discoverer of another. This was Francis Thompson—author of "The Hound of Heaven"—who died young, but already famous, twenty-five years ago.

Francis Thompson's outcast period had a strange resemblance to that of De Quincey, as related in "The Confessions of an English Opium-Eater"; and, curiously enough, this book was given to Thompson by his mother in his boyhood.

But the parallel has been exaggerated, and Mr. Meynell assures that there was only one occasion when opium was known to have overcome the boy-poet's senses.

At the Oxford Union.

The Presidential debate at the Oxford Union recently crowned a most successful term of office for the president, Mr. Christopher Smuts. Mr. Lansbury and Mr. Duff Cooper crossed swords on the topic of Socialism as the only possible cure for the world's ills.

The candidates for next term's presidency are two Socialists and a nominal Liberal, Mr. Giles Playfair, the witty son of Sir Nigel. Mr. F. M. Hardie, of Christ Church, the Librarian, is one of the Socialists. The other is Mr. Tony Greenwood, the son of the ex-Minister for Health.

It was an exciting triangular contest.

Fashion's Parade At Hollywood

Backless, Frontless Gown Appears

Eyes On The Blondes

HOLLYWOOD'S newest premiere certainly disproved our theory expressed pretty frankly five years ago that "women will never again distort their bodies." Distortion was the order of the day since practically every gown and cloak and cape worn by the famous stars departed radically from the natural silhouette.

The big surprise of the evening was supposed to be the new ending put on the picture after the professional preview and giving to it the Colton finish "Sometimes I feel sorry for the whole world" (throwing the last scene to Sadie Thompson) instead of the ending originally put on the picture by Milestone which gave the final scene to Horn with the quotation from Nietzsche, Lex-O-Muttons.

The change became mild in view of the question on everyone's lips: "Have you seen Joan Crawford?" Most of the audience did not glimpse the star until she rose shyly to take a quick bow when Eddie Cantor, Master of Ceremonies, called on her. But even in that quick glimpse the thousands there realized that not since the days of their great-grandmothers had such balloon-like sleeves been seen in public. Joan Crawford's lex-o-muttons were the hugest imaginable, billowing out from her shoulders for a good eight inches on either side and tapering into long tight fitting cuffs. This evening coat of Madonna blue broadcloth is the latest sartorial extravagance and I may as well go on record right now as saying that only a Joan Crawford, or somebody built very much like her, should try it. Double breasted, the coat buttoned up to the throat base with sharp little flaring reverses. It was moulded about that famous waistline in a manner to make the eyes gladden. Only movieland can achieve an effect like that. Her hair was brushed straight back from her face and worn in a long bob.

Down the aisle came something straight out of the family album—a quaint little cameo-faced figure of long ago. A second look and it turned out to be Eleanor Boardman in black velvet with muffed sleeves and an ermine trim, coming her shoulders and turning up in a collar that looked like the cup of a calla lily. Her hair done in little ringlets across her forehead carried a fan-shaped gold comb at the crown of the head with a coronet of pearls along the top. Ringlets fell down the back of her head to the nape of her slim neck. Here again is something for a beauty . . . and only a beauty . . . to attempt.

Backless And Frontless.
A lovely brunette wore black velvet with sudden ermine sleeves puffing out furiously, and saucily accentuating her slim lines. A very tall blonde wore a gown that was, apparently, backless and frontless and that carried huge puffed sleeves hanging on to nothing in the world that one could see. It was in the famous Madonna blue that is a rage here now. Gwilt Andre's white gink coat had epaulettes of sable, you could not see anything of Mary Brinn except her eyes and her elbow. Her eyes are always lovely and her sleeves got all the rest of the attention because of their voluminous folds. Helen Chandler, who always looks about sixteen, was a surprised Alice in Wonderland with her gown of turquoise blue with coat of the same shade, her blonde ringlets and her pliant little face. She never seems old enough for her orchids.

And speaking of flowers: are the florists making up for the depression? They are, also who started the great wreaths of gardenias that were worn everywhere? Most of the women looked like the winning horse on Derby-day. A lot of gardenias thick and fragrant circled the neckline of the décolletage and fell far below the waist-line. How do you lean back in a theatre seat

Jewellery For The Season

Copper Ornaments Revived.

THIS season there are only two alternatives so far as wearing jewellery is concerned; either the most beautiful of precious stones ornaments of metal done in the new modern manner. Copper has been revived and is stunning with rich browns, blacks and wines. A wide bracelet of coin silver, with a container for powder and rouge or carfare concealed within the upper side, is an amusing accessory. Slender bracelets by the half dozen, finger rings of black metal, silver and copper, add a sophisticated touch to the simplest ensemble. Crystal, tortoise shell, celluloid, nickel, other metals, are cunningly woven into jewellery accessories. Even the lowly safety pin appears in varied designs, a Greek key, a sailor's knot or one in cut steel in the Victorian manner.

under such circumstances? Don't be ill . . . Hollywood can't be bothered with comfort, it wants attention and plenty of it!

Fashion Items For The Spring

Accessories For The Season.

NOW it is the little things that count; that give character to the costume. The season's gowns, so simple in effect, so intricate in architecture, have made accessories more important than ever before. From bonnets to boots, a variety of wearable items, "little things," so-called, are being created for the individual type and in relation to the ensemble. Some of these accessories are practical; others are frivolous.

In the practical class are included matching bags and slippers, nickel-trimmed belts, new sweaters and cashmere scarfs. A cardigan for country folk is hand-knitted of the same flecked Shetland wool that is woven into the famous tweeds of that name. And comes a little sleeveless waistcoat of white wool in the original waffle weave.

Neckwear, meaning that becoming touch of white at throat and wrist, carries on in new and delightful forms. Both the ecclesiastical and judicial forms are represented in these latest neck adornments. One with a pleated ruff which circles the neck has, in front, three tiers of pleated mousseline edged with narrow valenciennes and attached to a plain band of the mousseline with ends that tie at the back. Novel, as well as comfortable to wear, are collar and cuff sets of snowy crocheted Angora wool.

BLOUSES AGAIN FASHIONABLE.

BLOUSES are indispensable this season, now that suits are staging a come-back. A successful model, to be worn as an over-blouse or tuck-in, is in suede cord, a dull supple fabric in creamy beige. It is buttoned high at the neck and has the ubiquitous leg-o-mutton sleeves. Another one in white is tailored with the precision and simplicity of a Vionnet. In the truly French manner is a dainty blouse of white chiffon trimmed with infinitesimal tucks and valenciennes lace—for your most formal afternoon party.

Combining both the practical and frivolous is a mink capelet with muff of the same fur. Another set shows tilted cap and small muff of leopard skin. The large square muff of silver fox is an elegant and flattering accessory.

GOLDFIELDS OF THE WORLD

Lure And Romance Of Reef Mining Great Fortunes Won And Lost

REPORTS of important gold discoveries have been very prevalent of late. New Zealand described its Otago discovery as the richest alluvial gold find known to the present generation," writes Cecil Narcombe in the Daily Telegraph.

Johannesburg mining houses claim to have found an important extension of the Witwatersrand, running for thirty miles to the west of Krugersdorp. Kenya Colony has come into the limelight as a potential producer of gold.

It would seem that the world's store of the glittering metal is not locked up in the French and American vaults, after all.

Of Otago we cannot say much. It is admitted that the workings are alluvial, which generally means a little nuggets washed up in narrow creeks, or incredibly rich veins of gold-reef located in the hillsides. The trouble is they do not last; one day men are in the midst of the stuff, which is so rich that the gold can be seen with the naked eye; the next it is gone.

Sometimes the reef narrows away until it becomes unworkable or ceases altogether. Elsewhere the reef continues, but loses its gold content. Again, when the find is tolerably rich but narrow, it pays to work on the face, but at depth the expense of haulage and support for the overhang must be propped up—turns profit into loss.

Gold-mining is not the simple way of making money that some people think it is. The writer has seen an outcrop of reef at Barberton, where the first important gold-mining activity in the Transvaal took place, which glittered in the sunlight and yielded ounces to the ton. A dolly—a miniature battery—was erected, and a few optimists set to work to win a fortune.

After a month the reef was lost and never found again. In that one month the machinery had paid for itself ten times over, and if the syndicate had abandoned the venture and gone elsewhere on quest of the yellow dust, all would have been well. Instead, all the profits were spent, and much more besides, in a futile search for the lost reef.

Fruitless Search.
Hence the necessity for constant values and ore reserves when discussing mining prospects.

I have taken samples across the width of an outcrop reef near Moulder's Drift, where, it is alleged, the latest South African discovery was made by a picnic party. After crushing with pestle and mortar, and washing in a prospector's pan, a little "tail" like a tiny comma was clearly seen at the end of the thin, white streak of washed sand. But it would never pay to mine it, and the prospectors knew it.

Why, the whole of the countryside surrounding the Rand has been criss-crossed with trenches and dotted with prospectors' shafts, for as the central mines were worked out the mining houses scoured the whole country in a fruitless search to find a new reef to replace the most consistent—if not the richest—gold-field in the world.

Therefore it may be accepted that no spectacular outcrop values would have been missed at Moulder's Drift. "Then," the reader will ask, "what of this thirty mile stretch of new reef discovered beyond the limits of the Witwatersrand Main Reef Mine?"

The answer is simple. We know it was there, but we did not know that it was payable, and, for that matter, it has yet to be proved.

True, the Consolidated Gold Fields are arranging a $500,000 company to exploit the discoveries made by boring, and, in one area, payable values have been encountered, but that does not mean that a new Witwatersrand will be developed west of Randfontein. There are miles and miles of gold-bearing reef round Johannesburg which will never be mined, because the returns cannot justify the development costs.

Big Depths Down.
It is an expensive business, this sinking of shafts thousands of feet beneath the veld to intersect the reef. Where it dips from near the surface, or outcrops, as it did at the old Ferreira and other central worked-out mines, the problem is simple; but when the bank follows the horizontal plane at great depth, the game will not be worth the candle unless it has width and a high gold content.

It costs a million pounds of South African money—about one-third as much again in sterling—to develop a deep-level mine. The expenditure in shaft-sinking and winding plant is enormous; the battery, cyanide works, and the whole of the extraction plant costs a fortune, and then the tale is not told.

Taxation, direct and indirect, is high; heavy contributions to the Government's Phthisis Insurance Fund are exacted, and, in addition, a share of the profits, based on a sliding scale, must be paid to the State.

Under this last heading one East Rand company paid the Receiver of Revenue a cheque for $1,358,888 Revenue a cheque for $1,358,888 12s. 7d. in 1927. This is probably one of the biggest cheques ever drawn in Africa. A copy of the original lies before the writer, and it is crossed and marked "Not Negotiable." It would be interesting to know if any unauthorised person in the world would have the courage to attempt to negotiate such a cheque!

Thus a discovery of gold does not necessarily mean a profitable mine, which explains why so many known goldbearing reefs are not being exploited.

ACUTE CRISIS IN RUSSIA

Food Privilege May Have To Go Possible Extension Of Private Trade

THE time is now ripe for drastic changes of policy in Russia. This autumn a crisis has been reached—if it is still possible to use the word of a country that has existed in a sort of permanent crisis for fifteen years," writes Martin Moore in the Daily Telegraph.

The food situation is more acute than it has ever been since the great famine of 1921. Tens of millions of peasants are passively resisting Stalin's agricultural policy; and the very partial successes in industry have done nothing to improve the lot of the worker.

Already there have been food riots among the textile workers of Ivanovo-Voznesensk, among the miners in the Don Basin, at Kiev, and in the once prosperous German Republic on the Volga.

Limit Reached.

Despite superhuman efforts in every industry, the output per man is steadily declining, for the simple reason that men cannot work without sufficient food. Every week tens of thousands of people are forsaking their work to go in search of some other industrial centre where there may be more to eat.

Always they are disappointed. I saw peasants in the North Caucasus who had trekked all the way from Siberia—from one stricken region to another!

The Dictators of the Kremlin realise that the present state of affairs can continue no longer. The limit of human endurance—even for Russians—has been reached. Belts have been tightened to the last notch. What will the new move be? I believe that the coming year will see a drastic curtailment of the plans for extending heavy industry. New industrial construction will be restricted to a minimum; for the condition of the people is such that the Soviets can no longer afford to paint their paradise of prosperity at the end of another five-year avenue.

They must produce at once, not blast furnaces, but boots; not power-stations, but pots and pans.

The Second "Plan." Projects for the Second Five-Year Plan envisage a big effort in this direction. They promise the people three times as much food and goods for personal use as they are able to buy at present.

By producing large quantities of these consumers' goods the Government hopes to induce the peasant to grow more grain. Thus it would break the vicious circle in which lack of food hampers industry, and lack of manufactures removes all incentive to agricultural production.

Meanwhile the Government has come face to face with inexorable economic facts. Many of the factories are spending more than the value of the goods they produce, and it is impossible to continue on such a basis. They will have to economise by reducing wages or staff.

Unemployment, which the Bolsheviks hoped to have abolished for ever, now looms before them once more as a definite possibility.

From several independent sources I heard the figure of contemplated reduction of staff given as 25 per cent. Such rumours may prove to be ill-founded; but their very currency shows that much is seriously amiss with Russia's programme of industrialisation.

There are three possible solutions to the crisis:

1. Russia may obtain new long-term credits. She hopes that Germany may agree to extend many of the existing credits, and is vaguely hopeful of some sort of financial aid from America.

2. An improvement in commodity prices may enable the Soviets to sell their oil and timber more profitably than at present, and so obtain money to finance further industrial construction.

3. Finally, Russia may be obliged to reduce her foreign purchases to a bare minimum, and bring new extensions of industry virtually to a halt.

It is becoming increasingly clear that this third way out will be forced upon the Soviets. No relief they may obtain under the first two heads are likely to be sufficient. The big industrial plants already under construction will be pushed forward; but Russia cannot now embark on new works that are not going to show immediate results in production of goods which the people so sorely need.

Workers' Discontent.

That is a possible solution of the economic problem. But at the same time the Bolsheviks are faced with discontent of gathering force among the workers.

The people feel that the Government has "let them down" in the all-important matter of food and the basic necessities of life. They work in a State factory for wages that are based on the assumption that the State will provide food at reasonable prices.

But at present the Government is only furnishing the barest minimum of food on these terms. For all else the workers are compelled to shop in a high-priced free market outside, where the peasants sell what the State has left to them.

There is bitter feeling, too, over the inequality with which the essentials of life are distributed. I do not think the average worker regards it as unjust that more and better work should merit better pay, or that technical proficiency should receive its reward. But he does resent the fact that such rewards should express themselves in ration privileges at a time when the common workers are so gravely undernourished.

Privilege in Food.

He regards it as natural that the Red Army, his bulwark against "capitalist invasion," should be well provisioned, and that the children should get the best possible food. But he does not like to see the Red Director of his factory eating meat twice a day, when the fourth-class restaurant gets only bread and gruel and cabbage soup almost all the year round.

What, then, is the solution to this gathering crisis of discontent?

I outline the following plan with due reserve; but I have reason to believe that it is one which is already being discussed in the Kremlin, and that some of its features may find a place in the new Soviet policy.

One prime condition of any policy is that the Bolsheviks can never voluntarily re-admit private ownership of the means of production, or "exploitation"—that is, private employment of labour. But they may be grudgingly obliged to confess that an extension of the free market offers the only solution of their present difficulties.

Two evils of the agricultural policy are the fixed quota demanded by the State, regardless of what the harvest may be, and the low compulsory prices paid for this quota. These might be abolished by substituting a tax in kind for the forced purchase of produce. This tax in kind would be a definite percentage of the farm's yield, not an amount arbitrarily fixed before the harvest.

The GLOBE TROTTER'S DIARY.

The Earl of Westmorland, known to his countless friends as "Burg-hie," is sailing for Canada, where he has been invited to judge the horses at the forthcoming World Fair at Toronto. He is thus following in the footsteps of the present Lord Fortescue, who, as Viscount Ebrington, was honoured with a similar invitation last year.

Lord Westmorland, who has had various jobs in the City and who is now a director of the Arsenal Football Club, has been brought up with horses since his cradle days, has kept a racing stable, and is a sound judge of horseflesh.

M. Herriot Attacked.—It is rare for a statesman to be bitterly attacked in public by his former private secretary. This experience has just befallen M. Herriot.

M. Gaston Bergery, who created uproar at the Radical Congress in Toulouse recently by hurling "accusations of political cowardice and gottism at the head of the French Premier," when he appeared on the platform, was M. Herriot's Chief de Cabinet, during the Radical Government, 1924-1926.

who maintained their opposition to M. Polcar.

M. Bergery married a daughter of the late M. Krasin. He is deputy for Mantes, and is the most active and intelligent of the younger Radical politicians in France.

A Disciple of Wren.—The death of Sir Mervyn Macartney, by sad coincidence, occurred within a few days of the Wren celebrations.

Although a devoted disciple of Wren, Sir Mervyn did not consider the great man infallible by any means. Nor was he afraid to say so.

He warned us twenty years ago that St. Paul's Cathedral was in danger. When at a vast cost, St. Paul's had been made safe, he declared publicly that "If Sir Christopher Wren had had more experience, St. Paul's would never have been classed as a dangerous structure. Wren made several mistakes, and his structure was by no means perfect."

way on the Opposition side, where, he says, it is difficult to hear. Partly, of course, this trouble is caused by Ministers and members who will not speak up.

"Mechanical devices," which means microphones and ear-phones like those in the Lords, have their perils. One remembers an occasion, just after their introduction, when listeners heard a pungent comment by Lord Birkenhead, intended only for the ear of the peer next to him, about a certain Labour member of the House.

Father At 89.—A man has become a father at the age of 89. This is shown by the records of the New South Wales Government Statistician.

His newly published figures show that a son was born to a father aged 89 in 1928, while in 1925, a woman of 55 gave birth to a child.

In the years from 1920 to 1928, nine women gave birth to children at 50, six at 61, two at 62, three at 65, and one at 66.

SURPRISING LEAGUE SOCCER RESULTS

It was a tussle between the polished methods of the Lincolns against the robust kick-and-rush play of the Police, and the latter proved superior because they had in Johnston, their centre forward, a man who was capable of trapping the ball, controlling it and shooting it into the right place, while the Lincolns could not produce a forward with any inclination to shoot. They relied too much upon reputation.

Kirkham may have been a splendid winger, and Baldry an Interceptor, but, on present form, neither are worth a pass.

The former, instead of cutting in and attempting something on his own, was satisfied to take the ball nearly to the corner flag and send across a square pass—splendid contrast, but of no avail when there was no one capable of shooting in the centre. Baldry, besides being too slow, kept well away from the left wing, who had a satisfactory afternoon in keeping the left winger in subjection. He had a golden opportunity to level the scores when Perkins was out of goal.

The Lincolns' half backs gave splendid support to their forwards, but their admirable work was all in vain. Ash was the better of the two backs, Hackett being very weak in his kicking. Johnston led the Police forwards with his usual dash. Having Wheeler in on the right wing, this section caused little trouble. Bett easily holding the newcomer.

This weakness in the Police forward line left Ash to shadow Johnston, but Channings and Stephens knew where their leader wanted the ball, and two passes between the backs was sufficient.

In the first case Stephens sent C. Pile up the wing, and his centre found Johnston in a position to beat Ash in a dash for goal to shoot past the advancing Heath. Before the interval Channings sent the ball between the Lincolns' backs and Johnston repeated his former achievement.

After a series of handling by the Police rearguard in the second half the Lincolns were awarded a penalty kick, with which Kirkham reduced the deficit.

Police:—Perkins; Blackburn, Dowman; Mintey, Channings, Brittain; Wheeler, T. Pile, Johnston, Stephens and C. Pile.
Lincolns:—Heath; Hackett, Ash; Turner, Cork, Bett; Kirkham, Harding, Malpas, Ridley and Baldry.

Second Division.

BORDERERS SURPRISED BY NAVY.

Chadwick Scores Only Goal of Game.

THE Borderers suffered their third defeat when they lost to the Navy by the only goal of the match.

The Borderers had their share of the game in the opening stages, but they failed to make any impression upon the Navy defence, Buchanan and Newman being safe at backs. Their opening movements from the centre of the field were constructed and with long swinging passes, they appeared to have the Navy defence at sea, but when the goalmouth was reached a tackle and a kick at the crucial moment nullified all midfield supremacy.

The Navy led by Taylor, got into their stride just before the interval, but Williams made a splendid save from Benton, and the half time found the score sheet blank.

With play becoming scrappy in the second half the Navy were fortunate when Chadwick's shot struck the upright and rebounded into the net, leaving Williams helpless.

Borderers:—Williams; Bees, Mountford; Wallace, Babbington; Corrie, Frisland, Hatchfield, Hamlyn, Morris and Matthias.
Navy:—Woodman; Buchanan, Newman; Blair, Henshaw, Ashman, Benton, Chadwick, Taylor, Sayer, Parsons.

KOWLOON'S NEW SIDE BEAT THE SAINTS.

First Half Superiority Tells The Tale.

KOWLOON, building a good reputation, new team against the Saints at the Half ground, yesterday, met with a convincing victory.

Their halves were not strong, though G. White was prominent in defence.

The Saints were best served in defence, Cruz playing splendidly and being well assisted by Guest. Omar led his forwards well but the wingers were weak and spoiled good chances.

Kowloon opened strongly and had most of the play in the opening half. V. White made a good run and his centre entered the net over Marques's head. The Kowloon forwards missed many chances, but went further ahead when Earvey made a great run on the left passing the ball for Webb to not from close in.

The second half was much more even with both sides attacking in turn. White had the misfortune to put the ball through his own goal and the Saints equalised through Omar. During the last quarter the Kowloon forwards pressed heavily and took the lead through Phillips, and Webb placed the issue beyond doubt with a good goal.

Kowloon:—Boyes; G. White, Staveley, Duffield, Benwell, Nicholas; Davis, Webb, Earvey, Phillips, and V. White.
St. Josephs:—Marques; Cruz, Guest; Kong, Reed, Moosa; Delgado, Gutierrez, Omar, Ward and Hussain.

EWO UNLUCKY AGAINST THE LINCOLNS.

Goalkeeper's Blunders Cost Chinese the Game.

EWO put up a surprisingly good fight against the Lincolns at Chatham Road, and were unlucky to lose by the odd goal in three.

Two mistakes by Lim Yun-tong cost his side goals, but he atoned for these later when he brought off some magnificent saves in the second half. Ewo had a good defence in Ma Ping-chong and Wong Che-pun, neither player being at fault. They also had a fast and dangerous forward line with the left wing being most dangerous. Au King-fung was a source of danger to the Lincolns' backs and was the outstanding forward.

The Lincolns' height and weight stood them in good stead, especially in the case of the defenders, who were helped by the Chinese keeping the ball in the air. Worrall at centre-half was a good worker with Hooguard the best forward.

In the Lincolns' first attack after the breather Barnes passed to Clayton who miskicked much to the surprise of Lim Yun-tong, the ball going past him into the net. A minute later the Lincolns went further ahead when a weak shot from Clayton was missed badly by the goalkeeper.

Ewo gave the crowd plenty of thrills after this, going close on several occasions to be eventually rewarded when good work by Au King-fung resulted in Te Wah-lang netting.

Lincolns:—Deacon; Roden, Colclough, Bacon, Worrall, Robson; Clayton, Barnes, Higgins, McGuinness and Hooguard.
Ewo:—Lim Yun-tong; Ma Ping-chong, Wong Che-pun, To Ho-hong, Ng Fook-hung, H. C. To, Lai Tai-chow, Au Ping-ming, T. Wag-leang, Au King-fung and Ho Yin-tin.

PAU LEADS SOUTH CHINA TO VICTORY.

Tsung Tain Throw Away Opportunities.

TSUNG TAIN lost to South China by three clear goals as the result of being unable to accept the opportunities presented to them. South China, well led by Pau Ka-ping, made no mistakes with the opportunities given them.

Pau was always getting the ball away from the scrimmage in his own area, and putting his forwards into motion with splendid passes that found the wingers every time. His best efforts were nullified, however, by too much dallying in front of goal on the part of his inside men. He was, however, well positioned when Ng Po-ku centred for him to open South China's account.

The opposition lacked a leader. They have a splendid man in Li Shai-yun, but his place is on the wing where he is capable of sending in dangerous centres. Pau Ka-ping, however, was the only player who was able to lead his team.

Tsung Tain:—Chan Sit-pot, Yeung Chi-chung, Fan Ok-choi, Ma Pui-ming, Mok Yin-sang, Chan Kun-ping, Lau Wah-wai, Tse Po-jean, Fung Hing-hing, Li Shai-yun and Tse Shiu-ye. South China:—Tang Shik-hung; Chung Fui-lan, Wu Kin-shing; Cheung Ping-lun, Siu Ping-shin, George Fung; To Wah-lang, Ip Koon-ming, Pau Ka-ping, Kam Shik-wai and Ng Po-ku.

ATHLETIC BEATEN AT LAST.

Artillery Rally In Second Half.

THE Athletic, after enjoying the best of the opening exchanges, were beaten for the first time this season when they lost to the Artillery by 3 goals to 1 on the Club ground.

The Gunners were without Fearson, and Hopkins was introduced as centre-forward, but he showed a tendency to wander. The Athletic were better at ball control and generally found the wet ground to their liking. Both their wingers were speedy and sent in some beautiful centres, but the Gunners' height upset this plan of attack. The Athletic were, however, the first to open the scoring Sak Pui-tin being responsible. The Gunners rallied and commenced started to show better understanding in the forward line. Greenhalghs was a tower of strength at centre-half and fed his forwards with some good passes; he also kept a wary eye on the inside men of the Athletic.

The Gunners by some good work scored the equaliser, through Hopkins. Soon after, a raid by the Athletic nearly materialised but was frustrated by Ward, who strained a muscle in so doing, and had to leave the field for good.

In the second half McDonald played a sterling game at left-half for the Gunners and held the Athletic right wing well. Gibbons, who dropped into Ward's position, was a little uncertain at first but soon found his feet as a defender. Greenhalghs secured possession and dribbled down the field before passing the ball to Hill, who took the ball on the wing before passing into the centre for Snook to place the Gunners in the lead. Shortly after, while chasing the ball, Hardy was tripped in the penalty area and the referee had no option but to award the Gunners a penalty. Hardy, however, shot straight at the goal-keeper. Play became boisterous and a similar incident occurred, and Gibbons converted the spot kick to place the issue beyond doubt.

Athletic:—Liu Kam-ming; Lo Wai-man, Tang Kwong-wing; Wong Wing-lin, Ho Chee-wing, Wong Sik-bing; Lo Chai-wan, Yeung Kam-ye, Ho Hung-chung, Sok Pui-tin and Cheung Koon-sing.
R.A.:—Holmes; Ward, Leadbeater; Wroe, Greenhalghs, McDonald; Snook, Hardy, Hopkins, Hill and Gibbons.

EASTERN SECURE FIRST POINTS.

Club Juniors Again Defeated.

Eastern, who so far have been the only team without a point, managed to secure their first points by defeating the Club by the odd goal in three in a scrappy game. The Club, who have kept changing their team around in recent games, lacked team-work and ball control. Low and Woods being the only outstanding players in their forward line, while Punchoon and Tavlin were the pick of the defence.

The Eastern defence was sound but unfortunately, Look Fook Wah deflected the ball into his own net after a scrimmage in front of their goal. They, however, equalised and took the lead through Ng Ping-kay, who was the best forward on the field.

Club:—Slmonds; Kirlovsky; Hooper; McKellar, Punchoon, Tavlin, Miles, Low, Woods, Stephens and Farrow.
Eastern:—Chan Yin-chung; Look Fook-wah, Fung Yui-wai; Ho Chi-yung, Chung Yui-nam, Li Yum, Chan Ping-yu, Leung Hu-nim, Ng Ping-kay, Lam Ping-tong and Ho Yu-nim.

German Club Beaten In Second Half.

MAMAK TOURNAMENT GAME.

The Royal Army Service Corps secured their eighth victory in the Mamak Hockey Tournament when they defeated the German Club by 6 goals to 2 on the U.S.R.C. ground yesterday afternoon, after being two-all at the interval.

In the second half the Germans fell away their defence being unable to cope with the speedy soldiers' forward line. H. A. Tipples (3) and P. H. Senior (3) netted for the Service Corps, while Lange and Mueller were responsible for the Germans' goals.

POSTPONED GAMES.

The Mamak Tournament matches between the R.A.M.C. and the 20th Battery R.A., and the Police and the University were both postponed and will be played on a later date.

MEDWAY'S TEAM.

The following will represent H.M.S. Medway to-day, against the K.I.T.C. at Causeway Bay:—Evans; Steers, Rhodes; Wisdom, Dunn, Lodge; Neworthy, Robertson, Holmes, Lewis, Allen, Reserves.—Birchley, Turrit.

After the interval Purrell completed his 'hat-trick,' while Hazlewood scored the fifth, and before the end Purrell again netted.

RECREIO'S SECOND HALF RECOVERY.

The Saints juniors appeared to have the points to their credit at the interval of their game with the Recreio, for they were much the better team and led by two goals scored by Costello. The Recreio, however, fought back splendidly, and in scoring through Laurel and Xavier, fully deserved to share the points, and thus rob the Saints of a precious point which would have helped them considerably in the championship race.

UNIVERSITY SECURE USEFUL POINT.

The Varsity, who have been facing badly of late, put up a splendid performance at the Valley when they held the Athletic to a draw, both sides scoring twice.

Goal-scorers for the Varsity were Kho and Oliveira, while Hu Yui Kwong and Pang Kam Hung replied for the Athletic.

TEN GOALS FOR R.A.S.C. IN SECOND HALF.

The Service Corps proved far too good for Talcoo and ran out winners by thirteen clear goals at the Valley.

In the first half the Corps scored three times, and the contribution to their big total were:—Sunde (4), May (3), Gray (2), Alvis (2) and Kinsale (1).

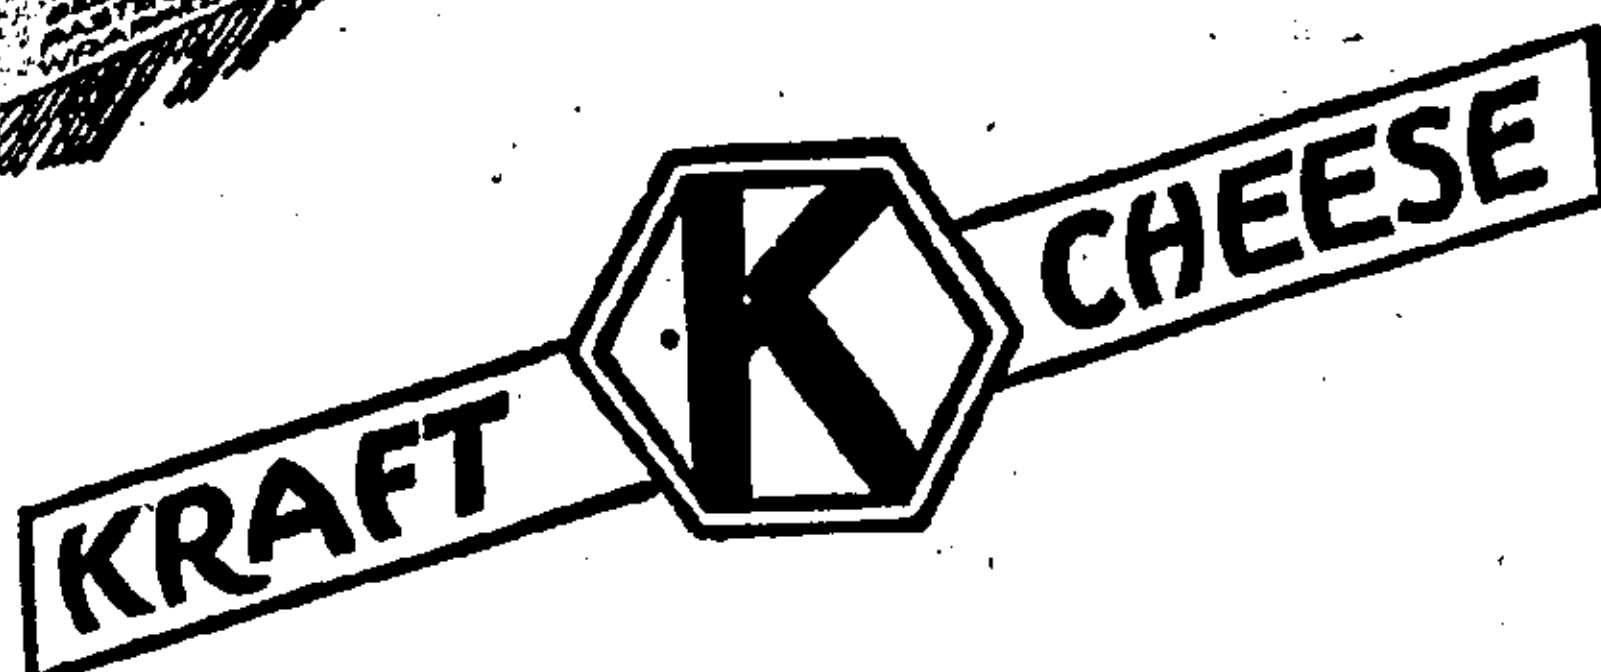

SOUTH CHINA PLAYER SENT OFF.

The 14th Bty. and South China played a very close game, with the 14th Bty. leading 2-0 at the interval.

Japan's Motives.

DUE in no small part to the impotency of the League of Nations the Far East dispute has not been settled and Japan, encouraged by her successful defiance of the League, has recommenced further acts of unjustifiable aggression. The situation brought about by the Shanghai Incident is most grave and is causing the Powers deep concern. It is impossible at this stage to judge the purpose actuating the latest Japanese move and the consequences can only be estimated. Many theories exist as to Tokyo's motive, the most feasible being that Japan wishes to put a stop to the rampant Chinese aid to the Volunteers, whose guerilla warfare in Manchuria has sorely harassed the Japanese. The more sensational view is that Japan intends to invade Northern China, extend her dominance over all territory north of the Yellow River, and restore the Manchu monarchy by establishing Fu-yi at Peking. The militarist faction control Tokyo's policies to such an extent that it is possible that such an ambitious project would be considered but the difficulties are obvious and numerous. Japan's economic plight would scarcely allow her to embark on such a tremendous and costly undertaking, while it is doubtful that she would dare to flaunt world opinion—American opinion in particular—by adopting such a policy. Further, while the initial resistance might be inadequate, there is little question that China, if invaded, would be forced to defend herself. This would eventually mean war between China and Japan and despite the efficiency and power of the Japanese military machine the task of subduing the combined armies of the Northern war lords (to say nothing of the support that would be forthcoming from the civilian population and from the south) would be arduous and protracted. At this stage General Chiang Kai-shek, if he cared, could deal a heavy blow on the comparatively small Japanese forces in and around Shanghai. Already it is evident that Chinese resentment has been stirred to a large degree and the appeal for armed resistance has attracted wide support. If the Japanese advance no further it is almost certain that the incident will close, to be later regarded as merely another injustice suffered by China at the hands of the Island Empire. Reviewing the Shanghai Incident and the circumstances leading to it, it seems probable that Japan will use Shanghai as a strategic outpost for the defence of Manchuria rather than as a base for the invasion of Peking and Tientsin.

World reaction to the latest Sino-Japanese clash reflects the perturbation of the Powers at Tokyo's fresh defiance but offers China little hope of effective support in the event of an actual invasion inside the Great Wall. The French attitude is particularly discouraging and reflects the view that the Far East dispute is but one of the many pressing problems confronting the world and as such could not be treated to the exclusion of all others. The League fulfils a valuable function in providing a debating place but it has long been apparent that Geneva is incapable of coping with any issue of such considerable proportions. China's best hope for support lies in America who has most to fear from Japanese ambition. The reticence at Washington on this Far East has been most marked of late and in the light of previous warnings to Japan it is most significant. It is also true that Japanese move was mainly aimed at General Chiang Kai-shek because of his active support of the Chinese Nationalist Government. It is also true that the Japanese move was mainly aimed at General Chiang Kai-shek because of his active support of the Chinese Nationalist Government. It is also true that the Japanese move was mainly aimed at General Chiang Kai-shek because of his active support of the Chinese Nationalist Government.

Religion And Science

Evolution And The Bible

HOW IT AFFECTS MAN'S ATTITUDE

(By the Rev. S. C. Carpenter, B.D., the Master of the Temple.)

THE practice of religion, at least in ways that are visible to the naked eye of an anxiously observing clergy, has decreased in volume. It has gained a good deal of intensity, but in extent it is not what it was.

On the other hand, what is called "interest in religion," especially on the side of its relation to science, is much greater. What does this suggest?

It suggests that the course of events—which, after all, is one of the clear ways in which the hand of God may be expected to reveal itself—will gradually bring about a sort of reorientation of religion, and will find and provide some practical outlet for the interest that there is. An interest that does not eventually find some practical outlet is no good.

Meantime it has seemed worth while to attempt a sketch of the history of the relations between Religion and Science during the last hundred years or so, in the hope that it may help to define the present situation, and indicate the next step.

BULWARK OF MORALS.

A hundred years ago we were still frightened of the French Revolution. Ever since 1789 Christianity, as represented by William Wilberforce and Mrs. Hannah Moore, had been thought of largely as the bulwark of sound morals against wicked revolutionary atheism. Hence came many schemes to educate the poor in "sound principles."

Hence also came the temporary and superficial adherence of a number of worldly people, who a generation or two before would have been found in the Delistical anti-Christian camp. They came over to the "Christian" side, partly because they thought it would save their own skins, and partly because the situation did seem serious, and in the Church there really was a solid moral platform.

All this made Christian reformers like Thomas Arnold almost despair of the Church, and threw other reformers, Cobbett, Paine, Place, Owen, and the Utilitarians into opposition.

Most violent of all was Shelley, who, in "Prometheus Unbound," pictured the fall of God and the resulting freedom and triumph of mankind.

It need hardly be said here that Shelley, in attacking what he thought to be Christianity, was casting down something which the best modern Christians indignantly repudiate, and that his atheism was a hymn to the true God.

LOST OPPORTUNITY.

Time has it revenges, and its revivifications. I do not want to exaggerate. Shelley's "humanism" was very far from being the same thing as Christianity. But there was in Shelley's creed little that Christianity has not been able to absorb, and find congenial to its best self.

Some people say that Christians always first denounce, and then pretend that they believed it all the time. What Christians really affirm is, not that either they or their forefathers believed it all the time, but that, if it is true, it was there all the time.

Christianity is always a much larger thing than any generation ever knows at the time.

By 1832 the temporary post-Revolution popularity of the Church had all vanished. An opportunity had been thrown away. The repressive methods of Pitt and the political obscurantism of the ruling classes during those forty years had been initiated in theological circles.

Inquiry was thought revolutionary. Remember that evolution and the idea that the Bible could be read critically were both utterly unknown. The Bible was not merely the Word of God; it was the words of God.

DARWIN'S TEACHING.

The story of Creation was read in Milton's Paradise Lost, and the story of the Fall was read in the Old Testament, and the importance of the Bible was not in doubt.

tain theologians to examine the relations of the Gospels to one another, or to humanise the stories of the Old Testament, were denounced as having a "secularising" tendency.

This was not all. Blow after blow was dealt at the structure from without. Lyell's "Principles of Geology" (1830) was found alarming and irreligious, because it accounted for things by a theory of gradual development.

Attempts were made—Hugh Miller's was the best of them—to force the "days" of Genesis into some kind of unnatural agreement with the "ages" of which geology was speaking. Some even went so far as to assert that God must have created the rocks "with the fossils in them."

Then came Darwin ("Origin of Species," 1859; "Descent of Man," 1871), with his theory of gradual biological development brought about by "Natural Selection," that is, the kind of selection which was involved by the struggle for existence and by preferences expressed in choice of mates.

HUXLEY'S PROTEST.

Then Herbert Spencer applied the same principles on a still larger scale, and found in Evolution the "explanation" of the whole range of the world's life.

The faith of some Christians led them to resist all this, to fight in the last ditch for the doctrine of "Special Creation"—for the belief that all the animals had been originally created as they are now. It was a sort of fight for "Moses against Darwin."

It seems strange to us that Christian faith can ever have been thought to depend on an issue so remote from "What think ye of Christ?" but it was so. Others took faith. The overstatements of many theologians were partly to blame for this.

It was because theologians confidently affirmed so many things that T. H. Huxley, on ethical grounds, became "agnostic." He was sure that it was not right to make affirmations which could not be logically proved. That he did constantly make such affirmations, as we all do, is perhaps not to be pressed. It was in its way a noble protest.

Other theologians, notably Frederick Temple and Richard Church, perceiving that evolution was only a description of the manner of the Divine creation, kept their heads, and pointed the way forward into a better future.

Darwin did not make public pronouncements about religion. Huxley was in principle agnostic, but, in fact, a severe critic of contemporary theology.

Tyndall went further. He was a declared "Materialist," sure that in Matter was "the promise and potency of all terrestrial life."

THE HAND OF GOD.

There were in the last century great debates about "tribal conscience" and the "utilitarian" theory of ethics, but in the end it became clearer, thanks to such men as Frederick Maurice, James Martineau, and Thomas Hill Green, three very different thinkers, that right was right anyhow, apart from what we know, or have known, or even ever shall know about it, and that the hand of God, seen in Creation and Providence, was seen most clearly of all in the higher reaches of man's moral life.

Here a chapter of the story ends. The adoption of a more distinctive "Christian" method, and of the use of the "argument from experience," belong to a rather later period.

The second article by the Master of the Temple will deal with the influence of the Bible on the Old Testament, and the importance of the Bible in the history of the world.

DIPLOMATIC AGENTS WELCOMED AT NEPAL.

A warm welcome such as has been rarely shown to diplomatic agents of foreign countries at Nepal was accorded H.E. Chang Ming Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy to Nepal, who left China last January and has recently returned. His special mission to Nepal was to decorate His Highness the Prime Minister and Supreme Commander-in-Chief of Nepal, Bhim Shum Sher Jung Bahadur, Rana, with a First class Pon Tung decoration and to bestow on him the title of Lachuan g-chiang, highest rank among the Chinese militaryists, on behalf of the National Government of China. In return, H.E. Chang was decorated by the King of Nepal with a Second class Kwang Hsing Pao-shun. Since his return to China, H.E. Chang has been appointed a counsellor to the Military Affairs Commission by Chiang Kai-shek, chairman of the commission. Upon the arrival of the Chinese Envoy Chang Ming at the Royal Palace at Nepal, he was welcomed by His Highness the Prime Minister Bhim Shum Sher Jung Bahadur, Rana, (2) the Commander-in-Chief of Nepal, (3) H.E. An atmosphere of dignified friendliness prevailed when H.E. Chang Ming, Chinese Envoy to Nepal, presented himself to the King and exchanged greetings in honour of His Excellency Chang, the Chinese National Anthem was played by the court band, and 21 guns were fired. The friendly call lasted for about 20 minutes.

BRIDGE NOTES

POST MORTEM

Post-Mortems, when hands result unfavourably, sometimes wax quite acrimonious when the partners seek to assess the blame for the unfortunate outcome, whether that outcome is a disastrous overbid by themselves or an equally disastrous Double of an adverse bid.

My mail the other day brought me a hand played recently at Fort McKenzie, Sheridan, Wyoming. The final outcome of the hand was extremely disastrous from the standpoint of North and South, who held tremendous honour strength, coupled with unusual distributional values, but who, in face of all these factors, permitted West to play the hand at a contract of five hearts, which he was able to make. As an impartial arbitrator, the North and South players submitted the hand to me, asking me to assess the blame where it belongs.

1—Justified by the favourable distribution, although the hand contains only 5 honour-tricks.
2—A daring vulnerable overbid. Certainly a perilous journey on the troubled seas of distribution.

3—Perfectly correct.
4—The freakish nature of the hand justifies a Raise.

5—The hand does not justify a greater Raise, in view of the Opening Forcing bid.

6—Far too timid. South's Opening Forcing bid and his Jump Raise certainly suggest that North should take further action.

7—In view of North's incomprehensible pass, South cannot be greatly blamed for the Double. It is readily apparent that West made his contract of five hearts, doubled, in the play, losing only one club and one diamond.

The correct bidding of the hand by North and South should run as follows, and it is not at all difficult to reach:

South West North East
2-C 2-H 2-S 3-H
4-S Pass 5-H Pass
6-S Pass Pass Pass

In acting as an arbitrator, I would say that North deserves the more severe criticism for failing to reach the Small Slam. Of course, the combined North and South hands will make a Grand Slam, due to the void in hearts in the North hand and the singleton diamond in the South, but this bid should not be made unless the East and West players force them to it when it is about a toss-up as to whether or not, if East and West bid seven hearts, North and South should double or take the slight chance which bidding a Grand Slam would entail.

THE LANGUAGE OF BIDDING.

Players who have their ears attuned to hear the bids not only of their partners, but their opponents at the Bridge table, sometimes have opportunities for drawing inferences and making bids soundly based upon the inferences drawn, which to others appear little short of marvellous.

An unusual example of drawing correct inferences from the opposing bidding was sent me the other day by Mr. Newman Lee Fitzhenry of Stinson Beach, Calif. The hand was:

2—An overbid. One spade would be sufficient.

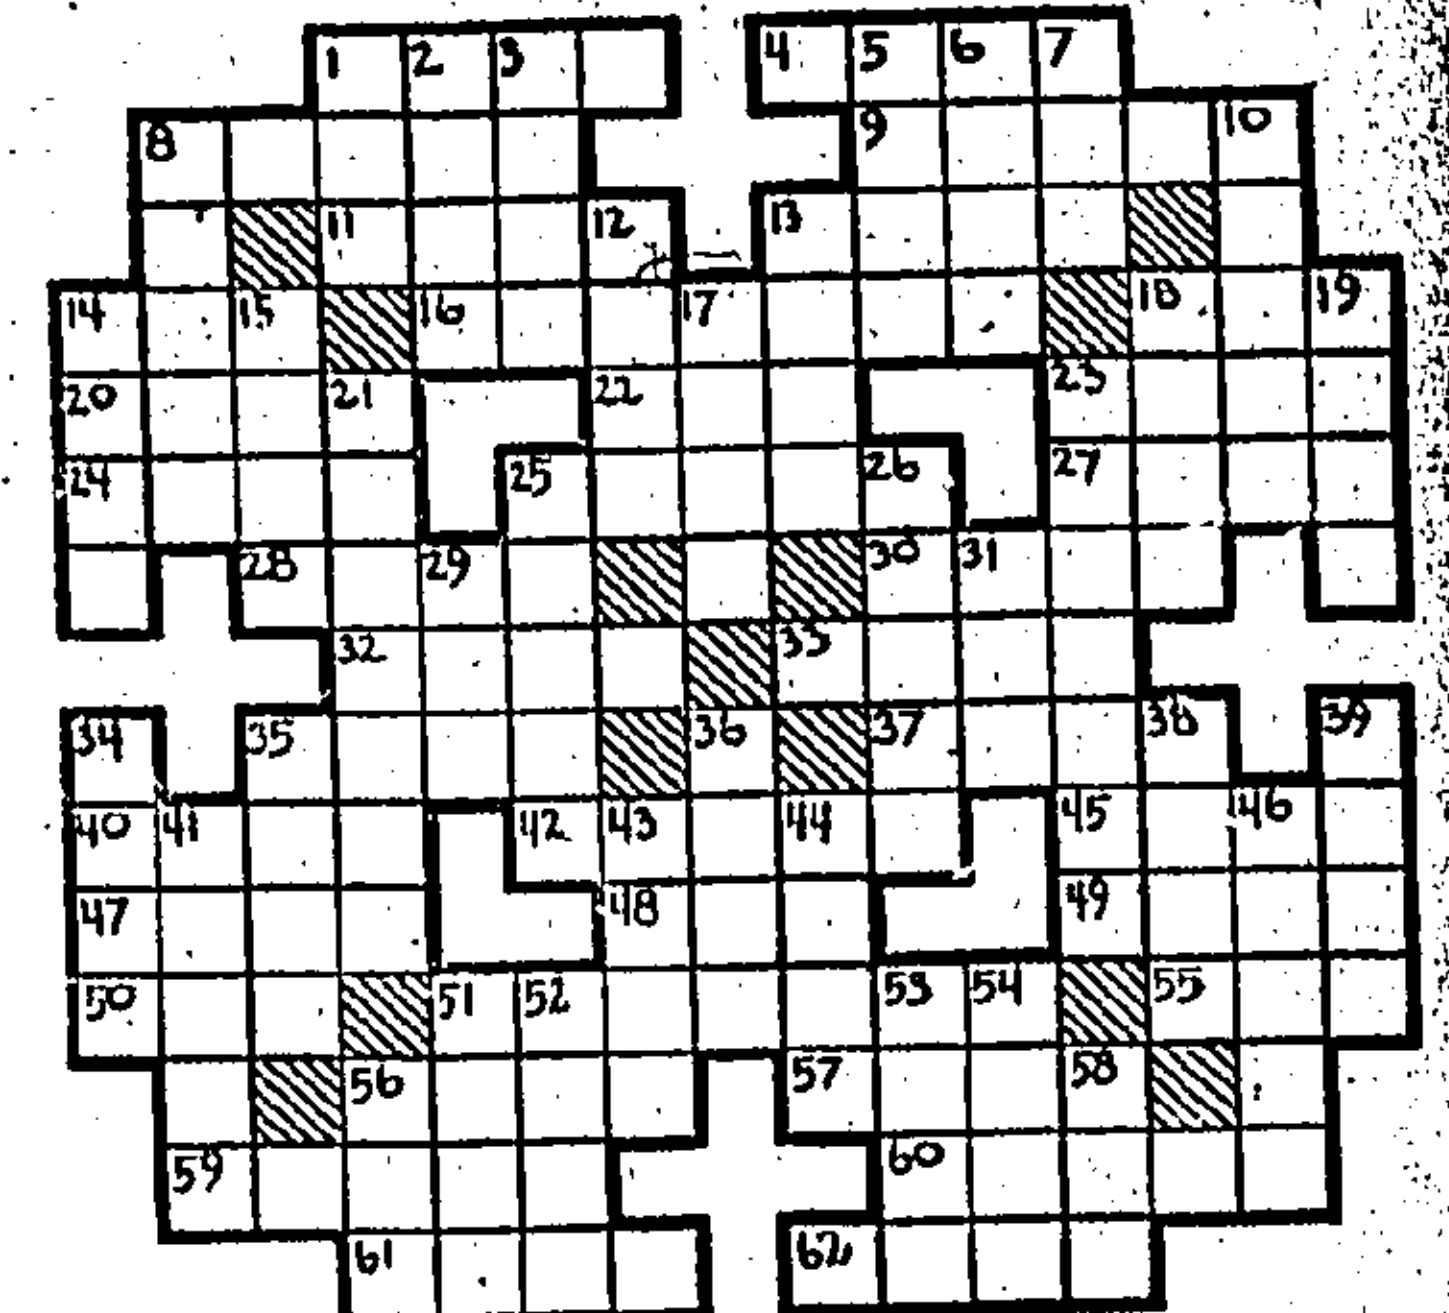

3—After South's Forcing Rebid, West continues to adopt a waiting policy.

CADILLACS, BUICKS FOR PAPAL STATE.

Delivery Of Vehicles To Vatican.

The recent delivery of four Cadillacs and five Buicks to the Vatican for the use of Pope Pius XI, was an event of unusual interest.

These cars were chosen for official duty in the Vatican State only after the most careful consideration.

Special Workmen.

The four Cadillacs were shipped from Detroit to Antwerp while the five Buicks were supplied from the Belgian assembly plant of General Motors Continental. All of the work on the Buicks was done by a special crew of Catholic workmen assigned to build these cars—an honour which the workmen appreciated as a special privilege.

When the Buicks were ready for delivery, they were driven to Rome, under special escort, where they were received by Commandatore Camillo Serafini, Governor of the Vatican State. The Cadillacs received the finishing touches in the Belgian plant and were held in Antwerp for the Chef de Service of the Vatican who journeys to that city to take delivery of the cars.

Good Impressions.

Although the cars have not been in service very long, they have created such a favourable impression that the Governor of the Vatican State has written two letters congratulating General Motors on its products and expressing the complete satisfaction "both from a mechanical standpoint and appearance of the bodies," that the cars are giving.

One interesting fact, incident to the delivery of this fleet of cars, was a souvenir of the occasion, presented to a General Motors representative by the Governor—a set of the Vatican models issued in 1929 commemorating the restoration of the Papal State. The set consists of nine medals or coins which are duplicates of the Vatican money which became legal tender in Italy in 1930.

A NOVEL FILLING STATION.

Under the heading "Petrol for Two" an amusing picture appears in "Motor Transport." It shows a petrol station at Pasadena, California, which has been built to resemble a teapot, even to the extent of being equipped with a handle. The spout has a real use, for it is used as a chimney during the winter.

"DOUGH-NUT" TYRES ARE WIDER

WHAT TYRE RESEARCH HAS REVEALED

FUELS DISCUSSED

NEW-STYLE air-wheel or super-balloon tyres, as far as safety is concerned, are close to par, according to engineering findings. They are not considered a serious hazard in comparison with ordinary balloons.

In future power plants for motor cars, high compression may be expected to continue as a trend. Automotive engine efficiency depends almost entirely on compression.

These are conclusions gleaned from findings in engineering research as affecting future design of automobiles. The Society of Automotive Engineers has held a convention at Toronto, Ontario, preceded by one at Buffalo, N.Y. At Buffalo, the deliberations were on production methods in association with six other engineering groups, comprising the Society for Steel Treating, the Society of Mechanical Engineers, the American Welding Society, the Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers, the Wire Association and the Drop Forging Institute.

At Toronto, the sessions covering four days were devoted to transportation in its broad phase covering highway operation of motor coaches, buses and trucks in fleets.

On tyre research, the specialist to whom the engineers listened was Mr. Burgess Darrow of the Goodyear Tyre and Rubber Co., Akron. He pointed out that since the beginning of automobiles, the tyre trend has been toward increased size and decreased air pressure. He cited Cadillac as an instance of a large car which once ran on tyres of actual cross-section measuring 4.5 square inches. Since that early period, the size has gone through stages of 4.90, 5.50, 5.75, 6.75, 7.00 and now 7.50 square inches, while the rim diameter has come down from 27 to 17 inches.

With the introduction of straight side tyres, the makers put in 10 per cent more volume than with the clincher type that preceded them. With the advent of the cord tyre in 1914, the same principle was extended to 10 per cent extra width over the nominal dimension. In 1922-1924 another step in oversteering was taken, resulting in what was called the balloon tyre. This in effect made another 20 per cent increase in width over the tyre it replaced.

"Dough-Nuts."

Now we are entering the super-balloon stage of "dough-nut" or "air-wheel" tyres which are 80 to 40 per cent greater in width than the balloons. Objections have been raised but none is regarded as insurmountable. These Mr. Darrow listed as disagreeable rocking motion at times, a tendency toward shimmy and tramp, and hard steering while parking.

"I believe that the chance of blow-outs and punctures from nails is lessened," Mr. Darrow said. "But the danger of sudden deflation is still a debatable point." A 7.50 air-wheel when suddenly deflated sets a wheel down about four inches which is less than commonly supposed and is fully about three-quarters to the high ground than the drop with the corresponding sign of a balloon tyre.

"Shot-gun" tests have been made and the fact that car engineers seem to be adapting or designing for the air-wheel leads to the conclusion that the majority do not consider the new type tyre a serious hazard."

Fuels Discussed.

Discussing fuels for automotive engines, Mr. Graham Edgar, director of research for the Ethyl Gasoline Corporation, Yonkers, N.Y., explained that the efficiency with which an engine converts the heat of combustion into power depends upon many factors, which include cylinder design, ignition and valve timing. In a given engine, efficiency depends almost entirely upon the compression ratio.

In increasing compression, however, a point is reached where combustion undergoes an abrupt change. A high pitched metallic sound occurs; the engine begins to overheat and the power instead of increasing begins to decrease. This phenomenon, the scientists call detonation, "knock," "ping," or "flap." If it did not exist, there would be no limit to the power that could be developed in an engine by increased compression, supercharging or both.

The nature of detonation has been made clear by research, but the reasons why different fuels differ so widely in this tendency still elude engineers.

Octane Number.

Mr. Edgar explained the origin of the term "octane number" now applied to automobile fuels which meet the specific requirements of certain engines.

"Two pure hydro-carbons differing only in their chemical structure," he said, "are employed as a scale of anti-knock value. One of these—pure heptane—knocks worse than any gasoline; another, isooctane, knocks less than any gasoline. So we express the anti-knock value of a gasoline in terms of percentage of octane in a blend of heptane and octane; that is the so-called octane number."

High compression, in Mr. Edgar's opinion, offers to the automotive engineer a means of increasing power and economy without increase in weight, with no increase in the cooling surface of the radiator and with a decrease of strain on bearings.

"The trend of the last few years in automotive engine design will be continued," he said, "and the fuel of the future will permit engines of greater efficiency than those of today with the result that the advantages of the high compression engine will be still more appreciated by the car owner who drives for pleasure and by owners of commercial cars."

TRIBUTE TO THE STANDARD.

Figures show that Standard cars are being exported weekly to practically every part of the world. It is a high tribute to the excellence of the Standard car and to the salesmanship of its distributors that it has found a market in Spain, Italy, Austria, Switzerland and Portugal, among other countries. They have found a British-made car through "taxi" walks even in cases when the duty on imported cars is something like 52 per cent, and energetic steps are being taken to capture further export markets. It is pleasant to know that Country A is the home of one of Britain's most important industries. As Mr. Darrow's prominent part in the Standard car industry is well known to the public, it is not surprising that he is a frequent contributor to the Standard car industry.

SPEED AN EXPENSIVE MOTOR HOBBY.

25 M.P.H. Most Economic Pace.

A motorist cannot have both speed and economic running. At about 25 miles per hour the greatest possible mileage can be obtained from petrol and oil, but at double that speed the running costs increase in surprising fashion.

At a steady 25 miles an hour little time will be lost in travelling, whereas the speedster has to brake every time he catches up with a slower vehicle, every time he approaches a railway crossing or a bad stretch of road, and every time he reaches a town.

25 M.P.H.

The steady flow of petrol at 25 miles an hour is much more economical than the irregular spurts demanded of the speeding vehicle. Besides, the faster the car goes the less proportionate amount of fuel is actually burned in the cylinders, for less time is afforded for the burning of the gases as the pistons pump faster. The result of this is that much petrol is wasted and a great deal finds its way into the crankcase, diluting the oil and wearing down the cylinder walls.

When the car is driven fast oil is burned up faster. The engine gets so hot that the oil in the crankcase has no time to cool off sufficiently, and therefore a lot of it "goes up in smoke."

Fast driving also means considerable wear on tyres. An actual test by one of the American tyre manufacturers has shown that tyres on a car going at 50 miles an hour wear out twice as fast as those of a car driven at 25 miles an hour.

There is, too, increased wear of the engine, and, in fact, all the moving parts of the car, while the application of the brakes of a car travelling at a fast speed has the effect of stretching body bolts and loosening nuts holding the body on to the chassis, with the result that squeaks occur, and, later, nuts fall off their bolts.

MOTOR INNOVATION IN CANADA.

Fluid Flywheel Coaches On View.

The introduction of the first A.E.C. fluid-flywheel coaches into Canada recently caused something of a sensation and nearly 10,000 people passed through one of the Rangers during the 4 hours that it was on exhibition at Toronto. These vehicles are 100 per cent Empire built—40 per cent British and 60 per cent Canadian and they are now in service on the Toronto-Buffalo route which is regarded as the finest cross-country run in Canada.

Pretoria Municipality, by the way, have ordered another three A.E.C. Range single deckers and the chassis will be shipped very shortly.

The Newest in Trolley Buses.

Derby Corporation have just taken delivery of one of the latest design double-deck electric trolley buses from Ransomes, Sims and Jefferies; this is of the 8-axis type with accommodation for 68 passengers. The chassis, which is specially designed for trolley bus service, incorporates the Thornycroft patent bogie, which has been adopted by Ransomes with marked success.

This patent bogie has decided advantages over the more orthodox design, the most important of which is that it has double pivoted springs on each side, thus ensuring balance of the torque reaction in the bogie itself, avoiding the necessity of torque rods and making possible a uniform and equal distribution of load on the bogie wheels under all conditions of acceleration and retardation. Further, the patented Thornycroft bogie prevents the lateral displacement of the bogie frame and the chassis, thus ensuring a smooth and steady ride.

"STYLE," as applied to the Packard, has always meant something more.

Associated with it, logically and distinctively, is the other important word, "enduring"—a Packard characteristic for a third of a century.

So gradually and correctly has Packard style evolved—like the slow unfolding of a beautiful flower—it has never been at the mercy of that capricious mood which too often alienates to-morrow's style from that of to-day.

NON-SKID ROADS ARE GIVEN TRIAL.

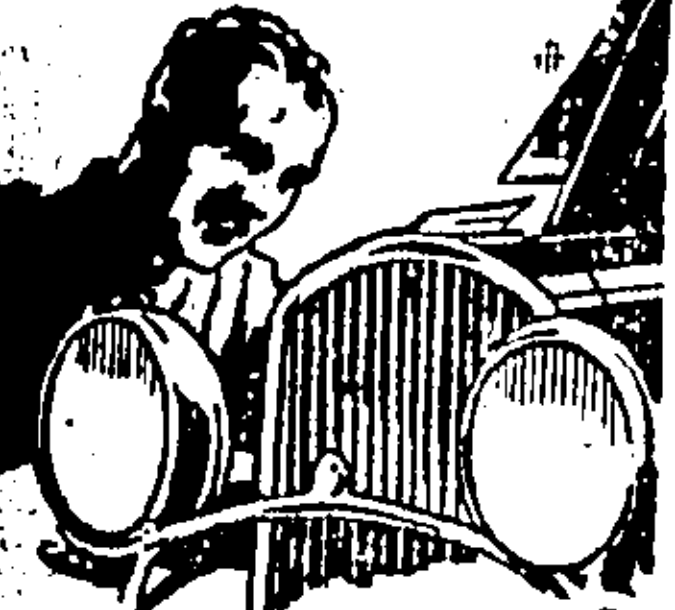

Mixture Of Rubber And Asphalt Tried.

In many parts of the world efforts are being directed towards using up some of the surplus production of rubber the carryover tonnage of which is now assuming big proportions. Despite the low market price of crude rubber, it is considered to be still an uneconomic proposition for road surfacing in sheet rubber form, although in a few isolated instances rubber paving has been used with success.

One of the most interesting developments in the recent invention by a Dutchman, who has evolved, it is claimed, a noiseless non-skid surface for roads. The process involves powdered rubber mixed with asphalt. It is reported that roads surfaced with the new preparation will be able to carry traffic within an hour of the application of surfacing, and although details have not yet been disclosed, it is stated that the new method is very simple and easy to use.

New Suggestions For Road Signs

EXHAUST GAS DANGER

"MY suggestion for special cross-roads signs which would indicate whether one was approaching a main or a secondary road has brought me two other plans from readers, and both are worthy of consideration," writes Sir Malcolm Campbell.

My idea, it will be remembered, was that the sign on a secondary road should consist of a cross in saltire—i.e., the shape of an X—with the letter M superimposed to indicate that the road about to be crossed is a main road.

I suggested this style of cross primarily because it is already as a warning of a road crossing. But a correspondent points out that a clearer warning would be given by using the Greek cross (+) with a variation in the length of the arms.

His plan has the merit that only two types of sign would be necessary to cover all cross-roads.

Long And Short

The longer arm of the cross would represent a main road and the shorter arm a secondary road. If the vertical arm were the longer the driver would know he was on a main road and approaching a secondary road, and if the horizontal arm extended the length of the upright it would indicate that a main road was about to be crossed.

I like this very much. The second suggestion is equally good, if not better. This again proposes a Greek cross, but in this case the superior road is indicated by a double bar and the inferior by a single.

Most correspondents advocate the placing of all road signs from 50 to 100 yards before the crossing they indicate. This I have urged many times in these columns; I consider it an essential reform.

There is everything to be said in its favour—and only one thing against it: If all signposts are to be so placed they will have to be quadrupled. On some of the new by-pass roads there are many island signs each carrying four arms.

Selfish Drivers

A Folkestone correspondent

voices the views of many other readers when he says: "Accidents would be reduced to less than half if motorists were not so selfish."

"In London traffic one constantly finds commercial cars and vans nosing into traffic in an effort to save a few seconds, effectually blocking others. These people gain practically nothing, but risk accidents for which their employers have to pay."

"Vehicles which are restricted to 30 miles an hour generally go at about 40 on the open road, and no action is taken to stop the practice. There is hardly a motor-coach on the road which does not go at 40-50 m.p.h. Why do the police allow it?"

The answer is that the police do not allow it, and that in some parts of the country the trapping of drivers of lorries and other heavy vehicles almost amounts to persecution.

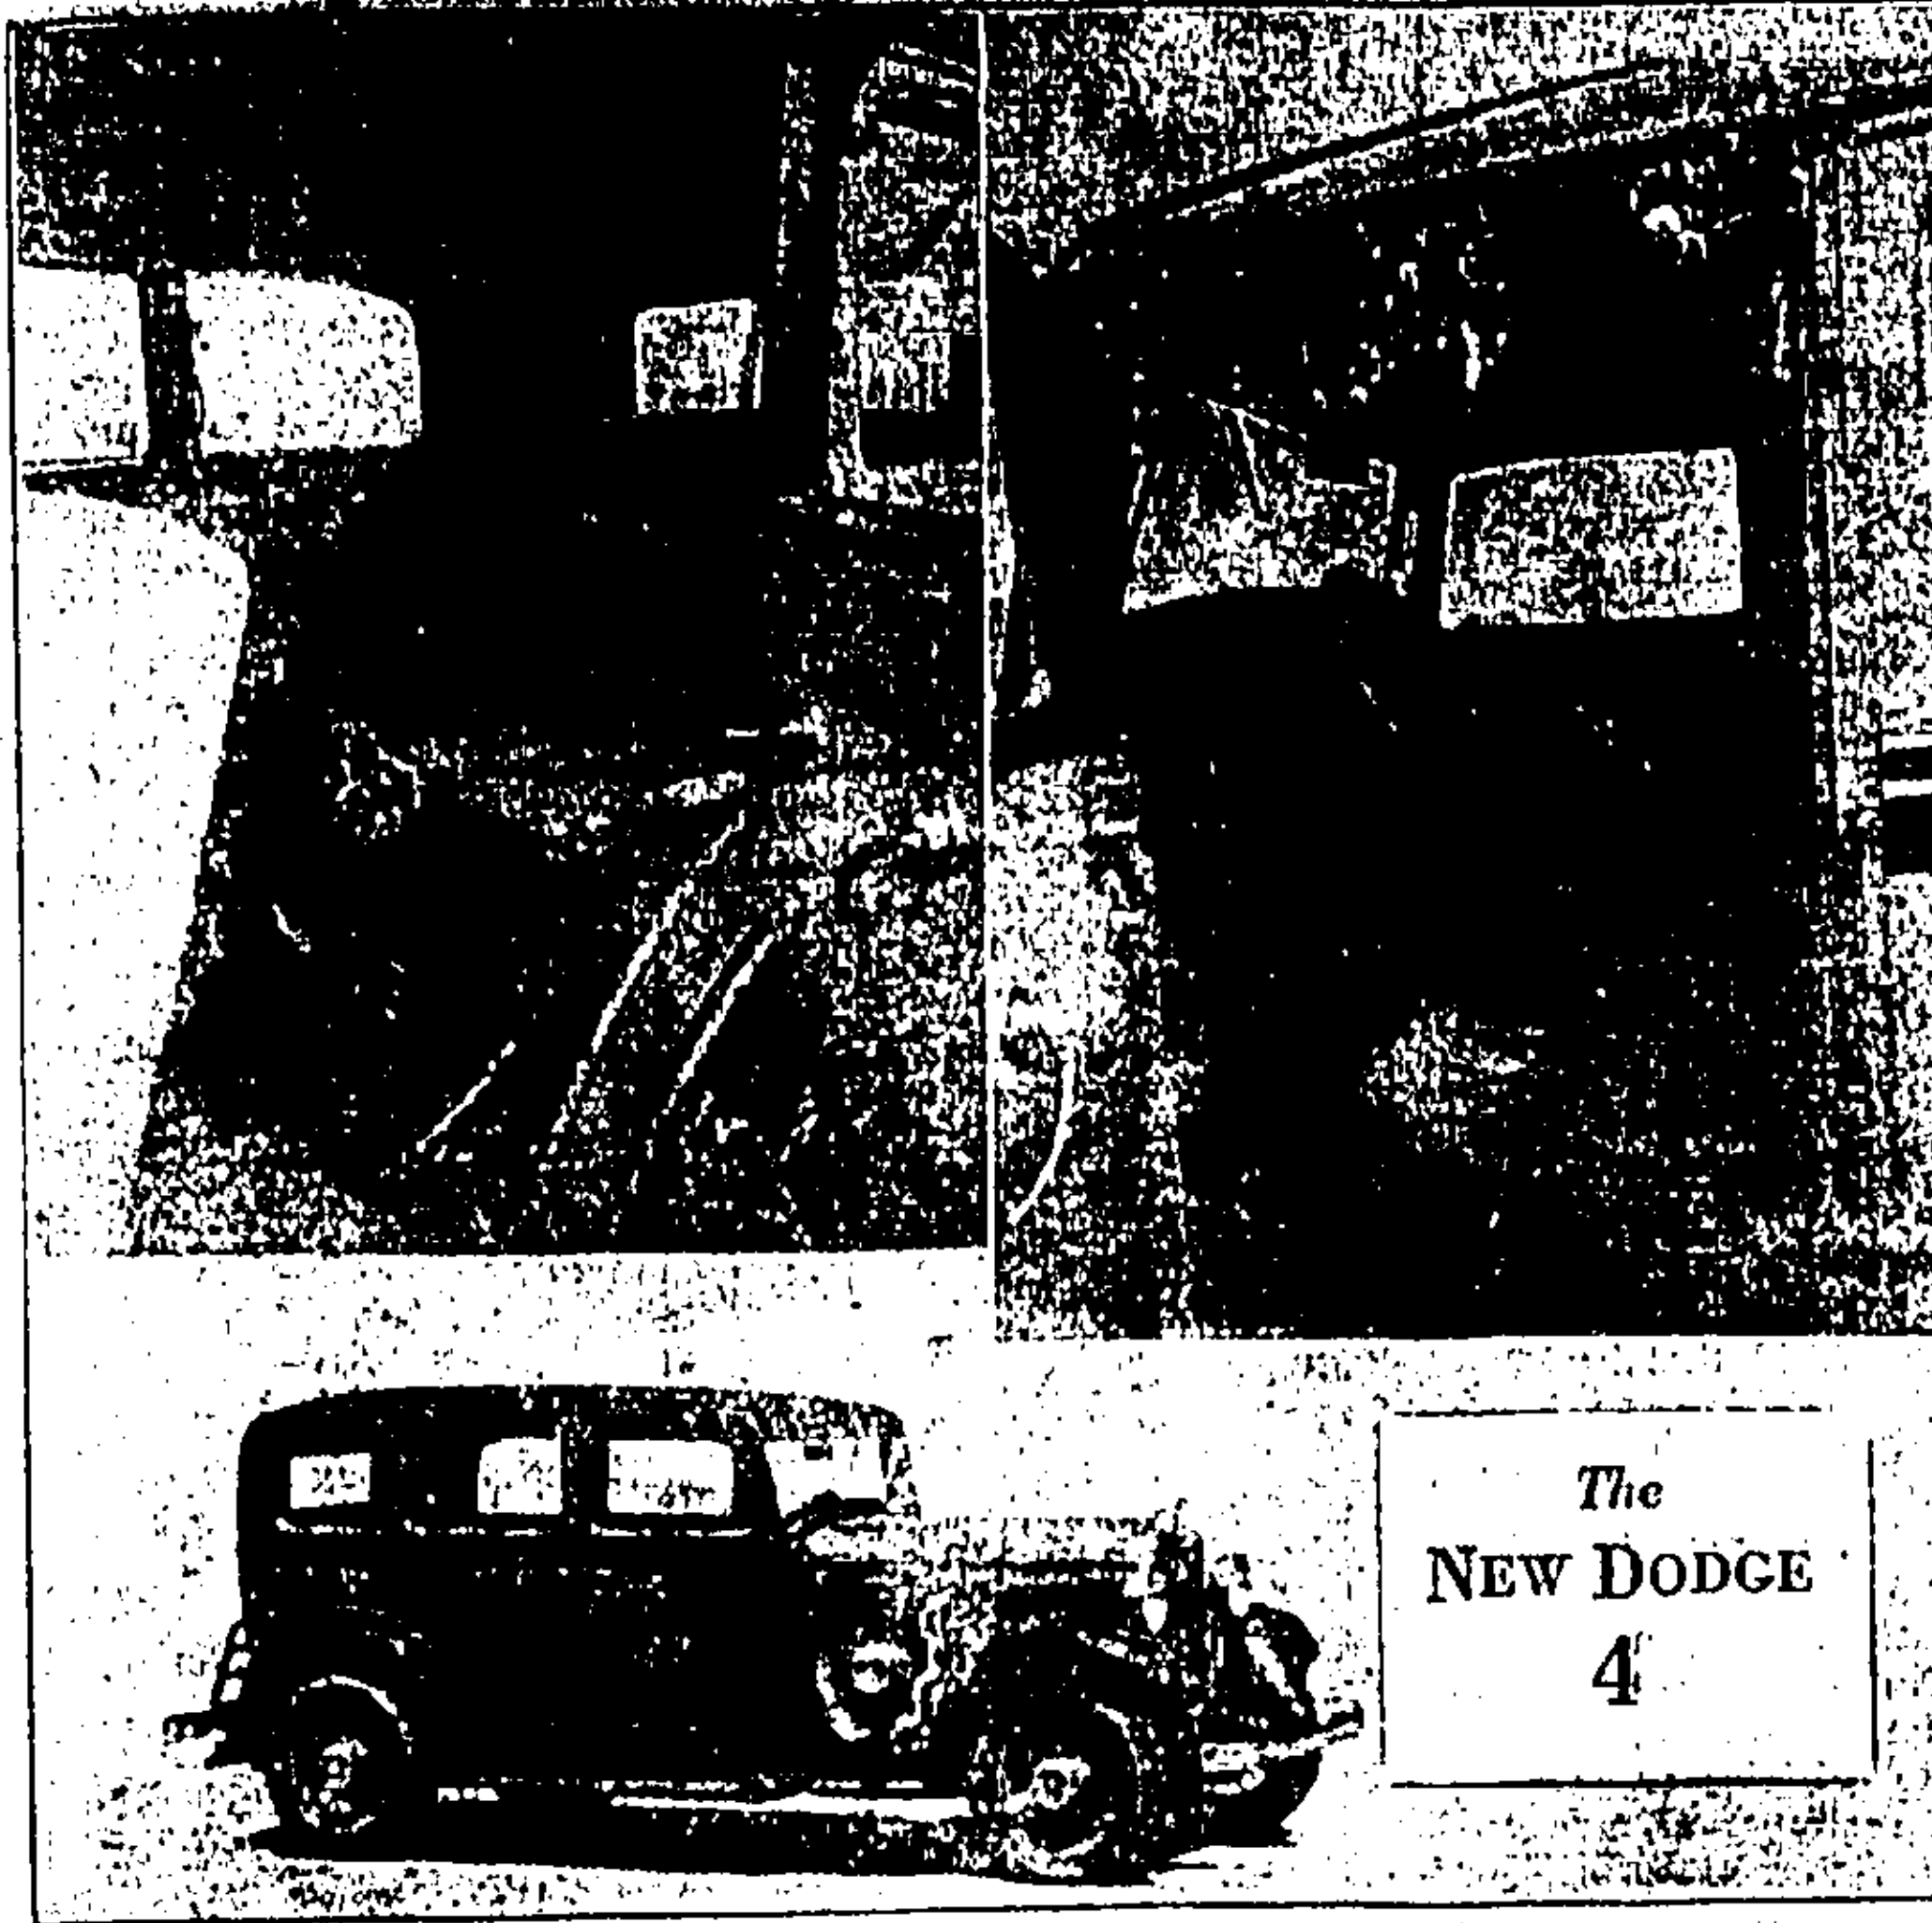

Playing The Game

I must say that on the whole the drivers of these vehicles do try to play the game by other classes of traffic. I know that some behave like road-hogs, but obstruction or general ill manners on the part of a man in charge of a five-ton lorry is so much more noticeable than similar conduct by the driver of a "baby" car that a whole class gets an undeserved bad name. The author of this complaint is on "better ground" when he criticizes the conduct of many drivers in London traffic.

For "nosing in," a general disposition to disregard signals, and failure to indicate his intentions the London taxi-drivers is hard to beat.

Even so, I believe he errs more from the character of his employment than with deliberate intent. He has a pretty hard life in these bad times. When he is "cruising" in search of a fare he is more intent on catching the eye of a fare than on anything else, and if he suddenly dives across the road without giving warning I can find it in my heart to forgive him, because it is his bread and butter he is diving for.

A crumpled wing is nothing to him, and he seems to think it ought not to be to you. We should all like him a lot better if he would mend his road manners and not take so many risks.

Exhaust Fumes

I have been taken to task for an error in writing recently about dangerous exhaust gases, but I submit that the mistake was more apparent than real.

I must plead guilty to having made the statement that carbon monoxide is a heavy gas, which has a tendency to sink and to lie low in a confined space. It has been pointed out to me that, in fact, carbon monoxide is lighter than air and this will rise. I ought to have qualified my bald statement, but let me make the matter clear.

Assuming the average density of air to be represented by the figures 14.4, that of carbon monoxide is 14, and CO₂—carbon dioxide—22. CO is slightly lighter than air. But, assuming that the exhaust gases from a motor-car in which carburettion is comparatively good are composed of roughly 83 per cent. nitrogen, 10 per cent. CO₂, and 7 per cent. CO, the resultant would be a gas with a specific gravity of 1.12, air being given the figure of 1.

Obviously, such a mixture, including the light monoxide, being heavier than air, would tend to sink, and, in still air, lie near the ground.

Effect of Heat.

It has been pointed out to me that at any temperature over 95 degrees Fahrenheit, even this mixture would be lighter than air and would rise. But tests made during the past few days show that the exhaust gases discharged from a car whose motor is idling have an average temperature, taken close up to the outlet of the pipe, of about 87 degrees. With the engine speeded up to about 1,800 revs, the temperature rises to about 110 degrees, again close up to the outlet.

With the thermometer held six inches from the outlet the gases from the idling motor appear to have a temperature not above that of the atmosphere, while in the case of the speeded-up engine the temperature in no case went above 92 degrees.

How It Happens.

With all submission to these correspondents who have put me right on the specific gravities of the various gases, I believe I am correct in saying that exhaust fumes, including the admixture of carbon monoxide, are heavier than air and thus tend to sink; that recent cases of death through the inhalation of exhaust fumes have shown all the characteristics of poisoning by the monoxide, even when the victims have inhaled the fumes while almost prone, showing that the lighter constituents do not diffuse out of the mixture, at any rate for some considerable time—that the mixture, in other words, is relatively stable.

never see car racing at its best.

Those who have Continental touring experience complain of the inferior road sense of the English compared with the Continental public, and attribute our high road casualty figures to that reason. But Continental peoples are regaled with frequent road races, which show them what good driving is, and teach them in ten minutes more road sense than can be taught in ten years by orders, notices, signals, lights, regulations, and the waving arms of armies of policemen.

English Road Course.

Sir Henry's plea therefore, deserves consideration. His book will intensify interest in the sport of which he is so accomplished an exponent, and that may be the first step to a road course in England. Humour, enthusiasm, and pace make this volume at once an entertaining and a potent tonic. It is dedicated to school-boys "as a piece of publishers' diplomacy"; but it is had across to the car, put it out of gear, put it in again, make sure that the starting switch is in order. The crowds surge round and ask intel-

Sir Henry Birkin On Motor-Racing England's Need Of A Road Course

BROOKLANDS CONDEMNED

SIR HENRY BIRKIN writes as he drives, fast and courageously, and his book, "Full Throttle" more effectively than any other on the subject that has come my way, not even excepting the classic by Charles Jarrett, re-creates the true atmosphere of motor-car racing and gives an inspiring picture of the work of the driver.

It also contains sound and forcibly expressed criticism, implemented by Lord Dowe in the Foreword, of the attitude towards racing taken up by the authorities and the trade in this country.

It is essentially a high-speed volume, and Sir Henry shows a remarkable knack for limning a scene in few words and conveying the authentic thrills, tragedies, and humours of one of the most exciting and most various of sports.

The reader takes part with him in some great road contests, doing battle with the impetuous Nuvolari, master driver of the moment, with Chiron, idol of the French crowds, with Carraciola, the Mercedes virtuoso, who can drive as fast in pouring rain as on a dry road, with Campari of the operatic voice.

Hurrying Along.

With his reader as passenger Sir Henry hurries along the straight at full throttle, passing and being passed by the bright red Alfa Romeos and the blue Bugattis; he struggles to maintain mastery of the car as it slides and skitters on the corners; he accepts tremendous risks and performs tremendous feats of judgment, daring, and physical endurance.

The book breathes the very life and spirit of the race. Here, for instance, is the start of a great road contest:

I am seized with utter misery and blank despair; all around the crowds are laughing, peering at the cars, and making it quite obvious that they at least are not excited. The mechanics are quite calm; the team manager is quite calm; making sure that his instructions are finally understood. Only I am in a turmoil. . . . Time after time I go across to the car, put it out of gear, put it in again, make sure that the starting switch is in order. The crowds surge round and ask intelligent questions; but my answers are generally so rude and abrupt that they ask no more, and go away with the impression that I am a thoroughly disagreeable old man. My friends come up and offer their good wishes, which I accept with a wan smile. All the time I tell myself that I shall get a bad start and be left at the corner, that the car will not start at all and be left completely, and then I go across and fiddle with the gears and switches again. Strangers bring their autograph albums to be signed; it is a welcome distraction, and I sign them all. Small boys fix me with a grim stare, and when I glare to make them go away, smile reassuringly and continue to stare. . . . Slowly the crowds begin to turn off the track, and the cars are left forlorn, gaping at us.

Brooklands.

He condemns Brooklands, and says: "The acid test of a car is a road course. Throughout the length and breadth of England there is no road course." It is common knowledge that preparations are being made for establishing two road courses in this country, the entire circuits being on private land where the law would not interfere. But whether either or both of these courses will receive the necessary financial backing remains to be seen. Without them England will remain the only European country whose public can never ridden in a motor vehicle.

By Dr. C. A. Allington Headmaster of Eton.

It is to be feared that the name of Francis Xavier (whose name stands in the Calendar for to-day) awakens but a faint echo in the mind of the average Englishman.

I remember an old Lincolnshire verger who complained to the daughter of his late vicar that he was overworked. When she protested that she thought he had an easy job, he retorted in broad Lincolnshire, "Ah, miss, a-a-a-ints da-ya's hav' coomed oop since your poor feyther's time!"

But whether his excuse was true or false, I am afraid that he knew as little as most of his countrymen of the great Jesuit saint, Francis Xavier.

The Jesuits have, not altogether without reason, a somewhat chequered reputation, and there are many things in the career of this great missionary saint which we should wish to criticise or even to condemn, but really great men are not so numerous that we can afford to be overcritical of their weaknesses; we are more profitably employed in trying to learn the secret of their strength.

Zeal and Devotion. And the strictest of Protestants need fear no harm from studying the career of his greatest of the Jesuits, whose "zeal and devotion call for unstinted admiration." The words are those of the author of the History of the Church Missionary Society, who will not be suspected of sectarian prejudice.

Francis Xavier, the Apostle of India and Japan, was born of a noble Spanish family in 1506. He was one of the original members of the Society of Jesus, formed in Paris in 1534 by his compatriot, Ignatius Loyola. He was despatched six years later as a missionary to India, and arrived there, after more than a year's journey, in 1542.

In India he ministered for seven years, both to the backsliding Catholics in Goa and to such of the native population as he could reach, besides visiting the islands of the Malay coast and the mainland of Cochin China. But he was still unsatisfied, and seven years later we find him setting out with three companions for the conversion of Japan.

Died in China. He made some thousands of converts before he returned to India, and died in 1552 on an island off the Chinese coast, full of enthusiasm for an attack upon that vast country in the name of his Master.

This bald narrative gives some idea of his boundless energy and devotion; the ecclesiastical narratives of his career abound in miracles which may well be questioned by the scepticism of a later age, but as Sir James Stephen has said: "There is at least one well authenticated miracle in Xavier's story. It is that any mortal man should have sustained such toils as he did; and have sustained them, too, not merely with composure, but as if in obedience to some indestructible exigency of his nature."

We may discount the 700,000 converts whom he is said to have made. But he remains a shining example of one who cared nothing for ease or comfort or for life itself if he could promote his Master's cause.

When he died on a naked island beach, with his hands stretched out to China, the last words on his lips were: "In te, Domine, speravi—non confundar in aeternum"; and his life and death have been the inspiration which has won many recruits for the noblest of causes.

"PEACH 'O RENO"

WHEELER, WOOLSEY, DOT LEE RUN RIOT IN ROLICKING NEW FILM OF GAY RENO.

Zelma O'Neill, Cawthorn And Excellent Cast In "Peach 'O Reno."

If you thought "Caught Plastered" and "The Cuckoos" were good vehicles for the comedy favourites, Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey, (and of course Dorothy Lee!) you should see "Peach 'O Reno" now showing at the Central Theatre.

In "Peach 'O Reno" the comedians and the producers, RKO-Radio Pictures have done a difficult thing. They have topped a long succession of comedy mirthquakes by a wide margin. "Peach 'O Reno" will probably stand long as the funniest picture Wheeler and Woolsey have produced.

One excellent reason for it is the superlative supporting cast which contains such favourites as Joseph Cawthorn, Zelma O'Neill, Cora Witherspoon, and Mitchell Harris of the stage fame, Sam Hardy, and Arthur Hoyt. All top-flight comedians, they have distinct characters unusual in comedies and every one of them is at his best.

As for the story, Tim Whelan, famous playwright, screen writer and humourist wrote it, and Ralph Spence, dean of the great old aggregation of silent movie title wrote the adaptation and dialogue.

It is hard to say just who is responsible for the fine sense of comedy, the nice balance between burlesque and realism maintained; perhaps it's just ideal teamwork.

Finally, one of the most celebrated of comedy directors is responsible for "Peach 'O Reno." William A. Seiter has established an enviable record of great pictures, usually with great stars in them.

As the title suggests "Peach 'O Reno" is a riotous take-off on the life in Reno to-day. It mingles enough realism with its fun to give one "wide-open town," and it covers the territory from railroad station to hotel, to lawyer's office to courthouse, with plenty of night-life of divorcees, divorcees, about-to-be-divorcees and hangers-on.

Robert Woolsey, who is constantly seen with a cigar on the screen, never smokes after working hours. During the making of RKO-Radio Pictures' "Peach 'O Reno", which co-stars the comedian with Bert Wheeler, a statistician discovered that Woolsey consumed 289 cigars. The cigars, incidentally, are the finest obtainable and are very mild.

Bert Wheeler does an exceptionally funny impersonation of a gold-digger blonde in his latest co-starring comedy with Robert Woolsey, RKO-Radio Pictures' "Peach 'O Reno." Wheeler not only portrays the role of a woman but sings a popular ballad in falsetto. The picture, one of the best starring the two comedians, was directed by William Seiter and of course Dorothy Lee is in the cast.

"THE OLD DARK HOUSE"

"WHY HORROR PICTURE APPEAL."

How does the screen's most vivid portrayal of terrifying, evil characters feel toward the horrible brutes he creates? Does he fear them? Do they awe even him, as they awe his audience? This seemed pertinent questions to ask Karloff, the sensational star whose grotesque, unholy characterisations have thrilled the motion picture world from the bottoms of its feet and made this singular man the most talked of screen personality to-day; have made his name synonymous with stark terror wherever motion picture are shown.

And from this strange personality came the even more strange answer.

"They fascinate me!" He said it without a moment's hesitation, this mild mannered Englishman with the pleasant mouth and essentially kind eyes, while submitting to the ministrations of Jack Pierce, Universal's great makeup artist, who was preparing him for the scenes of "The Old Dark House," the weird drama in which he is featured, and which opens at the Central Theatre on Wednesday, the 11th. of January.

"Yes," Mr. Karloff repeated, "they fascinate me, and before you ask me why, I'll tell you," he smiled. "It's really a very old reason, and it is a human reason. In fact it dates back to Mother Eve who perhaps first revealed that evil is much more fascinating than good when she allowed the serpent to merchandise his apple. There is a little bit of evil in us all, but fortunately we manage pretty well, to keep it suppressed. But that little evil responds to just such terrifying monsters and brutes as I have happened to play.

"A great many in various more or less prosaic walks of life, do not get the chance I have to indulge this inherently bad streak. If they did, I am convinced their reaction would be identical with mine. They, too, would be fascinated."

The kindly visage of the great actor was rapidly changing as he sat in the makeup chair. His cheeks were now sunken and covered with a coarse bristling beard. One eye was drawn, unblinking, and from his beetling forehead a jagged, lurid scar descended to disfigure evilly the erstwhile noble nose.

But surely, it cannot be all make-up. Is there no other transformation taking place? Is there a frame of mind which such strange paris demand?

Again Karloff smiled, a twisted, rather sinister while it now seemed. When he answered, the voice seemed harsh and possessed of a menacing overtone.

"You are right," he said, "there is definitely such a frame of mind to be acquired. It is necessary to concentrate on this spark of evil of which I speak, to magnify it until it almost consumes you, to bring yourself to think only of what you now are, and what in this state your desires embrace. Only in this way can you authentically render to the exacting camera a convincing impression of your screen personality. It is a large order, and it requires a mental preparation which I am forced to observe each day some time in advance of the hour appointed for my arrival on the set."

As he finished speaking, the makeup artist signified his satisfaction and Boris Karloff rose to his feet, a massive, hulking giant of 6 and a half feet, his neck twisted and broken, and embodiment of evil, towering there like a living proof of the mood he had just described.

He was right. Terrifying, but fascinating, unescapably fascinating.

"BIRD OF PARADISE"

FAMOUS ROMANCE COMING TO SCREEN.

Having played to almost as many legitimate theatre audiences as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Richard Walton Tully's famous play, "Bird of Paradise" has finally reach the talking screen and will open soon at the Central Theatre.

The lovely Dolores Del Rio will be seen in the exotic role of "Luana," created on the stage by Leonore Ulric. Joel McCrea, handsome hero of several of Constance Bennett's recent pictures, heads the supporting cast.

Filmed in Hawaii, this latest RKO Radio picture is filled with the sensuous beauty of the tropics and has been given a lavish production by King Vidor, creator of such outstanding pictures as "The Big Parade," "Street Scene" and "The Champ."

One of the episodes particularly praised by critics in Metropolitan cities where the picture has been shown is the first native marriage feast ever to be recorded by camera and microphone.

An underwater fight with a shark, the flight of an entire village from the deadly lava of an erupting volcano, and a daring version of the hula, are among the other highlights of "Bird of Paradise."

The love scenes between Dolores and McCrea are said to be especially enchanting, and a beautiful score of native music, running through the entire production, is an added appeal.

Hitherto, however, there has been no apparent troop movements here, nor any reported from elsewhere. Reports are widely circulating to the effect that ex-Manchu officials are hurrying to Tientsin in the hope that the Japanese military authorities will install Mr. Henry Pu Yi as Emperor. The consensus of opinion here is that Marshal Chang Hsueh-ling will be eliminated—with honour if he resists, with dishonour if he does not.—Reuter.

Tokyo To Decide.
Nanking, Yesterday.
The future developments in North China rest entirely with Tokyo for, unless the Japanese troops attack, the Chinese will do their utmost not to aggravate the situation. This, it is understood, was decided at a series of conferences to-day. Meanwhile, however, the Government intends following a policy of preparedness. Military preparations will be made in North China along the coast and in the Yangtze Valley to cope with any emergency which might arise.

General Chiang Kai-shek, this afternoon returned to Tongshan, where he will spend the night. He is returning here to-morrow afternoon.—Reuter.

Hu Han-min's View.
Canton, Yesterday.
Mr. Hu Han-min took the Central authorities to task for their non-resistance of Japanese aggression resulting in the loss of Shanhai-kwan and Manchuria, according to his statement appearing in the vernacular press to-day.—Central Press.

Chang Denounced.
The impotence of the League of Nations was stressed by Mr. Chow Lu in an interview appearing in the Chinese press to-day. He said that Japan flouted the League whenever it had completed a session to deal with the Sino-Japanese dispute.

After the League had ordered Japan to evacuate Manchuria last December, she went ahead to occupy Chinchow, and despite the League Council meeting in Paris asking Japan to quit Manchuria she went farther and took over Tsitsihar, Mr. Chow Lu said. Similarly after the League ended its session last month, he asserted, Japan bombarded and captured Shanhai-kwan. In his opinion, it is useless to depend on the League of Nations.

For failure to discharge his duties as a soldier, General Chang Hsueh-ling should kill himself as an apology to the country, Mr. Chow Lu demanded, stating that those soldiers who do not resist should be regarded as common enemy of the people.—Central Press.

Geneva Secretary Here.
A charge against the League of Nations of adopting an indifferent attitude to the Sino-Japanese complication at the outset of the Shanghai hostilities last year, was made by Mr. Yu-an Tcheng, one of China's four secretaries at Geneva, during an interview with the Sunday Herald yesterday.

He stated that the Powers assumed an indifferent attitude mainly on account of the divided state of the country, and particularly because of the split between the northern and the southern governments.

Since the Shanghai hostilities, he said, China had gained more prestige, and the Left Party of the League were decidedly in sympathy with China. The Japanese violation of the League Covenant, had been one of the big factors for the change in public feeling.

Mr. Tcheng, in taking four months' leave, and will stay in the Colony for three weeks, before proceeding to Nanking.

Rifle Shooting At Kowloon Tong.

The first day's shooting of the Hong Kong Rifle Club's January Competition took place yesterday at the Kowloon Tong range, the attendance being fairly good, and the standard of shooting very fair.

One competitor, R. H. Wood, returned a remarkably good score in the "A" Class, scoring 31 points on each of the 200, 500 and 600 yards firing points, returning an aggregate of 93 out of a possible 105.

The following were the results:—
"A" Class Possible 105, Ranges 200, 500 and 600 yards, one sighting shot and seven to count on each range:—R. H. Wood 93, Watson 85 (Competition unfinished).

"B" Class (Same Application)
A. Chappell 77 (Competition unfinished).

Firing will commence at 10 a.m. this morning.

WOMAN COMMUNIST SENTENCED

Constantinople.
A German woman named Fraulein Wilda was sentenced here by the criminal court to four years' imprisonment on the charge of having disseminated Bolshevik propaganda. Sixteen other defendants, several of whom belong to prominent Turkish families, received prison sentences ranging from three to seven years.

Fraulein Wilda, who is a strikingly beautiful woman, appeared as a dancer in the fashionable bars and clubs of Constantinople where, so it is alleged, she tried to make converts for the Communist cause.—Trans-Ocean-Kuomijn.

More Victims Of Fire On "Atlantique"

Enquiries Ordered.

The French Government has ordered a judicial enquiry in addition to the technical enquiry. Much difficulty was experienced in bringing the still burning liner back to Cherbourg, where it was decided to head for when the attempt to make for Havre failed. Controlled by numerous tugs, the wreck progressed laboriously at the speed of three knots per hour. Frequent halts had to be made.

The smouldering hulk was brought into the main roadstead just before midnight on Friday. Despite the rough seas and a westerly wind, the tugs immediately began manoeuvring to bring the vessel round to port, and she was anchored in the inner road at 4 a.m. yesterday morning.—Reuter.

Underwriters' Losses.

London, Yesterday.
The series of costly fires has had a marked effect upon the attitude of underwriters towards luxury liners. Underwriters, some weeks ago, specially re-insured the Atlantique against fire risk. The original rate to cover the vessel for all risks, was 2 per cent. of the re-insurance rates, 20 and 30 shillings per cent. being paid to cover only the risk of fire.

The comparatively high rate to re-insure only for risk of fire was partly due to the unfortunate experience of the insurance market during the last few years with fires on big ships.

A rate of 90 guineas per cent. is quoted to cover the risk of total loss of the Atlantique.—Reuter.
